

A FEW QUESTIONS.

The last issue of the Fossil Journal devotes two columns of more of its space to the proposed new county of Wheeler, giving in full the boundaries of said county, and setting forth at some length alleged reasons why the new county should be organized, closing with the self-complimentary remark that "win or lose, we have the satisfaction of knowing that we have fought a good fight in an honest and upright way."

Had the Journal, as the representative and advocate of this measure, made the fact public a few weeks earlier that a scheme was on foot among a few citizens of its town to divide Gilliam county with a view to forming the proposed county of Wheeler so as to insure Fossil the county seat, and then proceeded to make a straight-up fight, open and aboveboard, for what it considered to be for the best interests of its own town, it could reasonably have claimed for the people whom it represents, that they were making an "honest and upright fight."

The Globe holds no ill feeling whatever towards the Journal, save as that paper is the representative and advocate of a measure which, if enacted into law, would prove sorely detrimental, if not fatal, to the best interests of Gilliam county, and from that standpoint we desire to ask the Journal a few questions:

Why was this measure kept a carefully-guarded secret from the people of that portion of Gilliam county which it is proposed to cut off, and even from the mass of the people of Fossil, if those who are behind the measure really believed that the people of that section are "practically unanimous" for the change?

How does the Journal arrive at the conclusion that the people of Mayville and Lost Valley precincts who signed the remonstrance would have signed the petition had it been presented first? Is not such an assumption an insult to the intelligent people of those sections?

Why did 40 or 50 citizens of Fossil and of the territory lying south of that town sign the remonstrance against any change in the present limits of Gilliam county? Was the mistake in the "editorial mention" in the Oregonian, to which the Journal refers, in which the word "Morrow" appeared in the place of "Gilliam" intentional or otherwise, and did that "mention" appear at the solicitation of some resident or residents of Fossil, or was it really a spontaneous outburst of feeling on the part of the Oregonian?

While explaining "mistakes" made by the Oregonian in regard to this matter, why does the Journal not explain the big mistake made in the alleged map of this proposed new county, as shown in the Oregonian a few weeks ago, in which it was made to appear that the proposed county would not take one inch of Gilliam county? Was this map published with the intention of misleading the people of Gilliam county, and in the hope that the bill would be passed and the county divided before the people could help themselves?

If the theory of the Journal is correct, that Wheeler county should, and will if organized, comprise strictly stock growing interests, and that Gilliam county should be altogether an agricultural and wheat growing community, why did the framers of this bill in defining the boundaries of the new county leave the first standard parallel at a point a few miles east of Mayville and jog two miles north, thus placing the town of Mayville and a large area of strictly agricultural land in the new county? Why did they not rather go farther south and follow the divide between Mayville and Fossil where "Nature has fixed the destinies" which divide the wheat growing and the stock raising sections?

Is not the effort made by the Journal to show that Gilliam county will be almost if not quite as rich, in taxable property, after losing one-third of her territory, a little far fetched, and must not the writer have done his figuring by the Dutchman's multiplication table which avers that "von from two, and tree is left," to arrive at such a conclusion?

The Journal refers to the opposition of the people of Gilliam to the mutilation of their county as the "utter selfishness of central Gilliam county," in spite of the fact that such opposition is general, almost unanimous in every section of the county north of the Fossil divide, and that a large number south of that line are opposed to any change in the present county boundaries. The truth of this assertion is evidenced by the remonstrance signed by 750 legal voters of the county, which is now before the legislature at Salem.

With regard to the county officers which the Journal charges have "deserted their offices and gone below to work against this measure," the Globe wishes to say this: The offices are not "deserted." They are each in the hands of efficient, capable persons, and every duty is being performed in a way that is satisfactory to the people who have business there. Further, no man loses his rights as a citizen or the right to defend his home and his best interests, as a citizen and taxpayer, by being elected to a county office, and it is as citizens of Gilliam county who have at heart the best interests of the entire county, not in the capacity of public officers, that these gentlemen are at Salem. They are there at the earnest solicitation of a large number of taxpayers, and their presence there may be said to be endorsed by 750 voters whose signatures adorn the remonstrance to the division and mutilation of Gilliam county.
