

THE CONDON GLOBE

THURSDAY, MARCH 2, 1900.
THE OFFICIAL PAPER OF GILLIAM COUNTY, OREGON.

GENERAL EAGAN'S REWARD.

Brigadier-General Charles F. Eagan, commissary general of the United States army, has just been suspended from duty for a period of six years to receive the full pay of his rank during the entire term, which is $5,500 per year. The extraordinary sentence imposed upon General Eagan by the president justly causes people generally to ask, "Is it intended as a reward or a punishment?" Under the laws the president has no authority to confer a leave of absence for meritorious conduct or for any other reason upon any officer of the army and allow him full pay during such leave, for a longer period than thirty days. After thirty days have elapsed one-half pay can be allowed which is the limit under the law. Therefore, the only rational conclusion that it is possible to draw from the liberal and complimentary sentence passed upon General Eagan is that under the guise of punishment the president found the means of conferring upon him a mark of esteem and favor of an extraordinary character.

The question will naturally suggest itself what brilliant achievements on the part of General Eagan has singled him out for such extraordinary favor, or what distinguished services to his country has won for him a reprieve from duty with full pay for a term that, under the statutes, the president could not have bestowed on Grant, Sheridan or Sherman.

When the answer is received that the term of six years' suspension from service with full pay has not been accorded to General Eagan as a favor, but on the contrary is the sentence pronounced upon him by the president as punishment, in pursuance of a verdict rendered by a court-martial, which found him guilty of conduct unbecoming an officer and prejudicial to good order and discipline in the army, it becomes difficult for those not familiar with the mysteries of the war department in the conduct of the war with Spain to understand its meaning. That President McKinley should order a high official of the war department to be court-martialed for an offense, and after being tried, duly convicted, and his dismissal from service recommended by the court, he should then pronounce such an extraordinary sentence, is certainly one of the things that is beyond the ken of ordinary mortals to understand. The sound mind and the enlightened conscience of the American nation will not recognize this sentence as a punishment, and will eagerly inquire further into the whole matter in search of a rational explanation of this unbecoming conduct of their chief executive.

The question will naturally suggest itself, what was the offense or crime of which General Eagan was convicted, and for which he receives such an extraordinary sentence. The offense consisted in vilifying his superior officer, namely, General Miles, the head of the army, in his testimony before the commission appointed by the president to investigate the conduct of the war, using low, vulgar language as follows:

"He lies in his throat; he lies in his heart; he lies in every hair of his head and every pore of his body. He lies wilfully, deliberately, intentionally and maliciously."

In pronouncing the sentence the president prefaces it with the following:

"The accused, after a trial by court-martial composed of officers of high rank and distinguished services, has been found guilty of conduct unworthy of an officer holding a commission of the United States and obnoxious to the highest degree to the discipline and good order of the military establishment."

Such a sentence, it would appear to the rational mind, is calculated to impair in the highest degree the confidence of the people in the integrity of their president. Such a sentence savors more of a reward than punishment when it is considered that the president has conferred a favor upon General Eagan, under the guise of a punishment, greater than he would have the authority to confer upon him as a reward of merit under the statutes of the United States. Such a sentence pronounced as a punishment for conduct which the president declares to be unworthy of an officer holding a commission of the government of the United States and obnoxious in the highest degree to the discipline and good order of the military establishment is certainly a travesty upon justice, and reduce the court proceedings to the level of a farce mockery. The rational mind will pronounce this sentence a reward and not a punishment for a crime. When it is further understood that the six years' term will expire a short time before General Eagan reaches the age that the law specifies for the retirement of army officers and that upon the expiration of the term of the sentence he again becomes a brigadier-general of the army in time to receive the benefits of the law that gives retired army officers three-fourths pay during the remainder of their lives, it will be evidence to the rational mind, that in this case if the convict himself had pronounced his own sentence he could not have more securely guarded every individual interest.

The conclusion is irresistible that the offense of General Eagan met with the approval of the president, and that when driven in obedience to public opinion to take official cognizance of the offense as an outrage on decency, a gross infraction of military ethics and a subversion of military discipline he prostituted the power vested in him by the constitution to pronounce a sentence that in reality is a reward rather than a punishment.—Times-Mountaineer.

are supposed to cost more money than those which have been out some time, but we are selling new goods as reasonably as ever.

The following nicely illustrates some people:

Assistant (to employer)—Please sir, what shall I mark this new lot of silk?

Employer—Mark the selling price at a dollar and a half a yard.

Assistant—But the cost price is four bits a yard.

Employer—Don't care what it cost. We are selling off regardless of cost.

We are not selling that way, but we have some new and handsome shirt-waists and undershirts. JUST IN which we are selling cheap. Ask to see them. Many are already sold. Our large, new spring stock, consisting of all kinds of merchandise, is already on the way here. Wait and see it.
