

THE GILGAM GLOBE.

THURSDAY, September 14, 1899.

THE OFFICIAL PAPER OF GILGAM COUNTY, OREGON.

OUR FIRE COMPANY.

No drill of the fire company was held last Friday evening for the reason that not enough of the members turned out to draw the cart and handle one line of hose. It is possible that this is to be the final outcome of Condon's first volunteer fire company?

The city has been to considerable expense putting in water works and providing fire fighting apparatus and we all know that without a thoroughly drilled team that can work together intelligently and without the loss of a moment's time it will be of but little real benefit in case of fire.

Every property owner is vitally interested in this matter, but if we all remain away from the drill, attending to our own private business, or catering to our own comfort, and depend on "the other fellows" to do the drilling and be prepared to protect our property, the fire company is going to be an incapable and weak-kneed affair. Unless we "lords of creation" intend to take hold of this matter in earnest, a motion would be in order to disband the present organization and turn the whole business over to the basket ball club. The women outclass us in public spiritedness every time, anyway.

In nearly all the important cities in the Northwest except Condon the ladies, God bless them, have adopted the sensible and obliging habit of removing their hats at lectures, entertainments and shows. It is no doubt an oversight that the custom has not obtained here, "ere this, and if our fair ones but knew how much prettier, more attractive and bewitching they are without head coverings, the fellows on the back seats would have a much better chance, than formerly, of getting the worth of their money.

The republican party leaders will not worry much about the result of the next national election so long as there are 15 other parties in the field against them, which is the number a writer in the Arena claims to have counted, and he adds, "there are others."

PULL TOGETHER.

The following from the Heppner Gazette, might be profitably read and personally applied by the business men of perhaps every town in Eastern Oregon:

"As the beginning of the fall trade is at hand the business men should unite in their efforts to secure all they can by pulling together. Rival towns are wide awake. Catalogues of all descriptions, from Portland to New York, are arriving by each mail; peddlers are at work all around us. To protect your own business interests is to stir yourselves and meet them on every turn. Heppner has the location and the goods and it is her duty to apprise the surrounding country of these facts. She must not sit idly by and suffer the loss she has in the past. Instead of cutting prices, and running down each others business, right here in town, they should stand united and resort to a slaughter without outside competition only. All residents from the wood sawyer to the banker, have like interests, which are dependent on the success of each other, and when a ruinous strife is on between them each one pays the cost. To make a thriving town we must stand together. Whenever a town's growth ceases, its down-fall is in sight, and its funeral comes swift when the enterprise and profits of the business men are turned against each other. As business men come here they have studied the field, and they come with the knowledge that opportunities are offered, and the business men already here should extend to them every encouragement and not allow their jealousy or indifference to weigh them down."
