ELECTIONS FOR 75 YEARS.

At the presidential election of 1824, the first of which record is kept of the popular vote, there were four candidates. Andrew Jackson received 155,872 votes, John Q. Adams, 105,321, William H. Crawford 41,282 and Henry Clay 43,584. But in this contest there were no recognized parties, no conventions and no platforms: the election degenerated into a personal contest.

In 1828 Jackson and John Quincy Adams were the only candidates for president. Four years later Jackson and Clay. In 1836 Martin Van Buren and William Henry Harrison were the only candidates.

In the campaign of 1840 the abolitionists held a liberty party convention and cast 7059 votes for James G. Birney, of New York. Harrison and Van Buren were the other candidates. In 1844 Polk and Clay were the chief candidates. Birney was again the nominee of the liberty party and received 62,300 votes.

At the election of 1848 Taylor and Cass divided the great bulk of the popular vote, but Van Buren, as the candidate of the free soil convention, polled 291,263 votes. Four years later the free soil vote went to John P. Hale and fell to 156,149. Franklin Pierce was the democratic candidate and Winfield Scott the Whig.

In 1856 the republican party came into the field with a strong organization, and for the first time since 1824 there was a substantial division of the popular vote between more than two candidates.

In 1860 four candidates divided the vote and as a result of the split in the democratic party Lincoln became president, the war was precipitated, the union preserved and the black man freed. These terrific issues so cemented party factions and obliterated minor differences that the election of 1864 found only two candidates in the field—Lincoln and McClellan. In 1868 Grant and Seymour were the only candidates.

In 1872 Grant and Greeley divided the popular vote, save for a slight diversion of 29,459 votes to O'Connor, nominee of the labor reform convention, and a smaller diversion of 5603 votes to Black, prohibition candidate.

In 1876 the popular vote was divided among four candidates. The democracy cast 4,284,757 votes for Tilden; the republicans threw 4,033,950 votes to Hayes; the greenback vote of 81,740 went to Peter Cooper; and the prohibitionists cast 9522 votes for Smith.

At the election of 1880 the greenback vote was thrown to Weaver and increased to 308,578. Neal Dow was the prohibition candidate but figured only in the "scattering" column.

In 1884 the greenback vote fell to 175,870, and Benjamin F. Butler was the nominee. The prohibition vote was thrown to John P. St. John and increased to 150,369.

In 1888 the popular vote was substantially divided between Cleveland and Harrison. Streater, nominee of the union labor convention, received 186,836 votes and Fisk, the prohibition nominee, polled 246,875.

In 1892 the popular vote showed greater division than since 1860. Weaver, populist candidate, received 1,041,028 votes.

In 1896, the popular vote was divided substantially between McKinley and Bryan—7,106,199 for the former, 6,502,685 for the latter. Palmer, gold democrat, was supported by 132,871 votes and Levering, the prohibition candidate, mustered 131,757.

At New York Monday, notice was issued by the Consolidated Gas company that on June 20 the price of gas would be advanced from 65 cents to $1.05 per 1000 feet. The Associated Press telegram that brings this news also brings the explanation. "The gas companies of New York have been brought under the control of the Standard Oil company."

This demolishes the defense put up by the trust supporters, that the real purpose and the real effect of the trusts is to bring more economiic methods to bear in manufacture, and thus while slightly increasing the profits of the trust, provide the consumers with cheaper necessities. That defense is a sham, and it is amazing that any one could be found to believe it. No one ever heard the promoters of a trust offering their securities on that theory. When they have bonds to float and stocks to market, the argument is advanced that the trust will control the market, will put up prices and hold them up, and will make enormous profits to be scattered among the stockholders.

The truth is, the trusts are juggling with the trend of natural conditions. This is an age of invention and of rapid cheapening of the cost of production. Prices of all manufactured articles have been falling for a generation. The aim of the trusts is to control the markets, arrest the natural fall in prices, and make enormous profits. To believe they are stirred by philanthropic aims to yield a dollar to the public that they are not compelled to yield is to attribute to them benevolent and even saintly traits which they are very far from possessing—Spokesman-Review.

A Sprained Ankle Quickly Cured.
"At one time I suffered from a severe sprain of the ankle," says Geo. E. Carr, editor of the Globe, Washington, Va. "After using several well recommended medicines without success, I tried Chamberlain's Pain Balm, and am pleased to say that relief came as soon as I began its use and a complete cure speedily followed." Sold by the Hudson Pharmacy—C. W. Crossfield, mgr.

Fine Cattle.
W. O. Minor, the well known cattleman of Heppner, is perhaps the proudest stockman in Eastern Oregon at the present writing. He has a right to be. Mr. Minor owns the finest herd of Shorthorn cattle in the state, in which he has invested a large amount of money during the past few years but it remained for him to cap the climax by a recent purchase which made him the owner of the best Shorthorn cow in America. The purchase was made in Indiana and included the champion cow and a yearling heifer calf. The animals arrived in Arlington last Saturday night from the East. The cow cost Mr. Minor $1750, and the heifer cost him $450, besides freight charges. The cow weighs 2300 pounds and the yearling looks as heavy as the ordinary fullgrown Eastern Oregon cow. Mr. Minor is an enthusiastic admirer of the Shorthorn breed of cattle and hopes some day to be the owner of the best herd of that breed in America.

If troubled with rheumatism, give Chamberlain's Pain-Balm a trial. It will not cost you a cent if it does no good. One application will relieve the pain. It also cures sprains and bruises in one-third the time required by any other treatment. Cuts, lacerations, frostbite, quinsy, pains in the side and chest, glandular and other swellings are quickly cured by applying it. Every bottle warranted. Price, 25 and 50 cts. at the Hudson Pharmacy, C. W. Crossfield, Mgr.
