SOLDIER WRITES OF THEIR LIFE AND OCCUPATIONS.

They Are Industrious, Working Hard for Little Pay-Lack Tools for Cuitivating the Land-Police of the City and Their Characteristics,

The subjoined extracts from a private letter from George L. DeForest of this city, who is a member of Company B in the Ninth Regiment, will be read with interest:

"So you would like to peck in this sacred city and see what my surroundings are? He also wears a coat which is thick and clumsy off with facings and bands of light but no yellow is ever used, for that is the sacred royal color, and no one but it. Policemen are thicker than huckleberries in this city of Pekin, there being, it is sald, between 15,000 and 20,000 of them within the walled city.

"This walled city is two miles square and has two great gates in each wall base, about half a mile from the corners, and a mile from each other. The streets are broad and stretch straight from one to the other, making the space inside into a big nine-block. The police stations are scattered all along the nine squares. The head of the police has charge of all the city gates. they being nine in number. The policemen never carry any arms, not even a stick, but keep swords, spears, guns and cutlasses in racks at the station, and when a signal gun is fired make a rush for the station from which the sound comes and grab the first weapon in sight. When on parade or when they have a review, which is quite often, is the only time they are armed, especially if they expect any foreign devils to be present. The weapons are funny looking, particularly a savage looking three-hooked spear, which makes a terrible, jagged wound. "Besides the 20,000 policemen within the wall, I am informed that Pekin maintains 144,000 more to regulate matters in the outer city. All these men are under the command of one head officer. The officers and the men furnish their own uniforms, but the state furnishes their arms, and each gets a monthly allowance of rice in addition to his pay. The chief gets a little pay, depending mostly for what they can squeeze out of the prisoners whom they pull in."-Utica Press.
