

A STUDY IN SCARLET

BY A. CONAN DOYLE.

"Cocks and hens," cried the little girl, gleefully, pointing at their ill-omened forms, and clapping her hands to make them rise. "Say, did God make this country?"

"In course he did," said her companion, rather startled by this unexpected question.

"He made the country down in Illinois, and He made the Missouri, the little girl continued. "I guess somebody else made the country in these parts. It's not nearly so well done. They forgot the water and the trees."

"What would you think of offering up prayer?" the man asked dimly.

"It ain't right yet," she answered.

"It don't matter. It ain't quite regular, but He won't mind that, you bet! You say over them ones that you used to say every night in the wagon when we was on the plains?"

"Why don't you say some yourself?" the child asked, with wondering eyes.

"I disremember them," he answered, "I ain't said none since I was half the height of that gun. I guess it's never too late. You say them out, and I'll stand by and count the choruses."

"Then you'll need to kneel down, and me, too," she said, lifting the shawl out for that purpose. "You've got to put your hands up like this. It makes you feel kind of good."

It was a strange sight, had there been anything but the buzzards to see it. Side by side on the narrow shawl knelt the two wanderers—the little, prattling child and the reckless, hardened adventurer.

Her chubby face and his haggard, angular visage were both turned out to the cloudless heaven in heartfelt entreaty to that dread being with whom they were face to face, while the two voices—the one thin and clear, the other deep and harsh—united in the entreaty for mercy and forgiveness.

The prayer finished, they resumed their seat in the shadow of the boulder until the child fell asleep, nestling upon the broad breast of her protector.

He watched over her slumber for some time, but Nature proved to be too strong for him.

For three days and three nights he had allowed himself neither rest nor repose.

Slowly the eyelids dropped over the tired eyes, and the head sunk lower and lower upon the breast, until the man's grizzled beard was mingled with the golden tresses of his companion, and both slept the same deep and dreamless slumber.

Had the wanderer remained awake for another half hour a strange sight would have met his eyes.

Far away on the extreme verge of the alkali plain, there rose up a little spray of dust, very slight at first, and hardly to be distinguished from the mists of the distance, but gradually growing higher and broader until it formed a solid, well-defined cloud.

This cloud continued to increase in size until it became evident that it could only be raised by a great multitude of moving creatures.

In more fertile spots the observer would have come to the conclusion that one of those great herds of bisons which graze upon the prairie land was approaching him.

This was obviously impossible in these arid wilds. As the whirl of dust drew nearer to the solitary bluff upon which the two castaways were, the figures of armed horsemen came to show up through the haze, and the apparition revealed itself as being a great caravan upon its journey for the West.

But what a caravan! When the head of it had reached the base of the mountain the rear was not yet visible on the horizon.

Right across the enormous plain stretched the straggling array, wagons and carts, men on horseback, and men on foot. Innumerable women who staggered along under burdens, and children who toddled beside the wagons, or peeped out from under the white coverings.

This was evidently no ordinary party of immigrants, but rather some nomad people who had been compelled through stress of circumstances to seek a new country.

There rose through the clear air a confused clattering and rumbling from this great mass of humanity, with the creaking of wheels and the neighing horses.

Loud as it was, it was not sufficient to rouse the two tired wanderers above them.

At the head of the column there rode a score or more of grave, iron-faced men clad in heavy homespun garments and armed with rifles.

On reaching the base of the bluff they halted and held a short council among themselves.

"The wells are to the right, my brothers," said one, a hard-bitted, clean-shaven man with grizzly hair.

"To the right of the Sierra Blanco, so we shall reach the Rio Grande," said another.

"Fear not for water," cried a third. "He who could draw it from the rocks will not now abandon his own chosen people."

"Amen! Amen!" responded the whole party.

They were about to resume their journey when one of the youngest and keenest-eyed uttered an exclamation and pointed up at the rugged crag above them.

From its summit there fluttered a little wisp of pink, showing up hard and bright against the gray rocks behind.

At the sight there was a general rising up of the unwilling and untrained, while fresh horsemen came galloping up to reinforce the vanguard.

The word "Redskins" was on every lip.

"There can't be any number of Indians here," said the elderly man, who appeared to be in command. "We have passed the Pawnees, and there are no other tribes until we cross the great mountains."

"Shall I go forward and see, Brother Stanger?" asked one of the band.

"And I," and I, cried a dozen voices.

"Leave your horses below and we will wait you here," the elder answered.

In a moment the young fellows had dismounted, fastened their horses, and were ascending the precipitous slope which led up to the object which had excited their curiosity.

They advanced rapidly and noiselessly, with the confidence and dexterity of practiced scouts.

The watchers from the plain below could see them flit from rock to rock until their figures stood out against the sky-line. The young man who had first given the alarm was leading with the voice of Joseph Smith, which is the voice of God."

CHAPTER II.

This is not the place to commemorate the trials and privations endured by the immigrants from before they came to their final haven.

From the shores of the Mississippi to the western slopes of the Rocky mountains they had struggled on with a constancy almost unparalleled in history.

The savage man and the savage beast, hunger, thirst, fatigue and disease—every impediment which Nature could place in the way had all been overcome with Anglo-Saxon tenacity.

Yet the long journey and the accumulated terrors had shaken the hearts of the stoutest among them.

There was not one who did not sink upon his knees in heartfelt prayer when they lay in the broad valley of Utah bathed in the sunlight beneath them, and learned from the lips of their leader that this was the promised land, and that these virgin acres were to be theirs for evermore.

Young speedily proved himself to be a skillful administrator as well as a resolute chief.

Maps were drawn and charts prepared, in which the future city was sketched out.

All around farms were apportioned and allotted in proportion to the standing of each individual.

The tradesman was put to his trade and the artisan to his calling. In the town streets and squares sprang up as if by magic.

In the country there was draining and hedging, planting and clearing, until the next Summer saw the whole country golden with the wheat crop. Everything prospered in the strange settlement.

Above all, the great temple which they had erected in the center of the city grew ever taller and larger.

From the first blush of dawn until the closing of the twilight, the clatter of the hammer and the rasp of the saw were never absent from the mountain which the immigrants erected to Him who had led them safe through many dangers.

The two castaways, John Ferrier and the little girl who had shared his fortunes and had been adopted as his daughter, accompanied the Mormons to the end of their great pilgrimage.

Little Lucy Ferrier was borne along pleasantly enough in Elder Stanger's wagon, a retreat which she shared with the Mormon's three wives and with his son, a headstrong, forward boy of twelve.

Having allied with the elasticity of childhood, from the shock caused by her mother's death, she soon became a pet with the women, and reconciled herself to this new life in her moving canvas-covered home.

CONTENDING FOR A PRINCIPLE.

Good Example of the Quibbles That Prevail in Legal Practice.

An English writer gives a good example of those quibbles in legal practice that have a sort of fascination for certain minds. Some years ago, while traveling on the continent, he met the principal lawyer for the government of one of the principalities, who told him of a curious legal question. It had reference to a railway station at the boundary between two principalities.

Someone standing outside the window of the ticket office had put his hand through and robbed the till inside. The boundary line lay between where the thief stood and the till, so that he was actually in one territory while the crime was committed in another. Here was a nice nut for the gentlemen learned in the law to crack. Which of the principalities should undertake the prosecution of the criminal?

At it went in good earnest, and the arguments on either side were long and vehement, till the whole case was embroiled in many volumes. At last one side yielded so far as to say:

"We will permit you, as an act of courtesy, to prosecute, while at the same time reserving all our sovereign rights."

At this point of the recital I asked: "And how did the prosecution end?"

"Ah! That is quite another matter," said my friend. "There was no prosecution; we were only arranging what we should do when we caught the robber; but we never caught him."

Youth's Companion.

Fearful Cold of Siberia.

There are still many drawbacks to travel on the great Siberian railway, but one of the greatest is the discomfort to which third-class passengers, especially native Chinese, are subjected. The past winter was unusually severe, yet the rolling stock is so inadequate that the Chinese ride in open freight cars. In January and February, when the thermometer registered from 30 to 40 degrees below the freezing point, the Chinese sat in crowds on the frozen trucks and frequently froze to death.

On one terrible night in February 15 Chinese perished and about 150 others suffered terribly from frost bites and exposure.

The Trappists.

Many letters come to the monastery announcing the death of relatives of the monks; these are seen by the abbot only, and at chapter he may simply announce: "The mother of one of our number is dead; let us pray for her soul."

Never to his dying day does the bearded Trappist leave that he was praying for his own mother.

Lessened Cost of Travel.

Before the Siberian railway was available, a trip from London to Shanghai cost from $325 to $475. Now it can be made for from $65, third class, to $160, first class.

Premontion Proved True.

A sensational case of coincidence recently occurred at Newport, Mr. Charles Ames, the proprietor of the Potter's Arms hotel, had a presentiment that he would die on the anniversary of the death of his wife, who fell and fractured her skull a year ago. His friends tried to laugh him out of it, but he was found dead in bed at 5 o'clock a few mornings ago—exactly a year after his wife's fatal accident.

Is the name sometimes given to what is generally known as the BAD DIS-EASE. It is not confined to dens of vice or the lower classes. The purest and best people are sometimes infected with this awful malady through handling the clothing, drinking from the same vessels, using the same toilet articles, or otherwise coming in contact with persons who have contracted it.

It begins usually with a little groin, a red eruption breaks out on the body, sores and ulcers appear in the mouth, the throat becomes ulcerated, the hair, eye brows and lashes fall out; the blood becomes more contaminated, copper colored spots and pustular eruptions and sores appear upon different parts of the body, and the poison even destroys the bones.

S. S. S. is a Specific for this loathsome disease, and cures it even in the worst forms. It is a perfect antidote for the powerful virus that pollutes the blood and penetrates to all parts of the system. Unless you get this poison out of your blood it will ruin you, and bring disgrace and disease upon your children, for it can be transmitted from parent to child. S. S. S. contains no mercury or potash, but is guaranteed a strictly vegetable compound.
