The Contrabandist; OR One Life's Secret. A TRUE STORY OF THE SOUTH OF FRANCE

CHAPTER XIV. "I shall see Robin this morning," was the first thought of Rose, as she sprang from her couch at dawn, and her heart beat faster, and her cheeks flushed with a deeper red, and her sweet hazel eyes sparkled with happy excitement as she sat before her mirror. The blue-eyed Finette was in raptures.

"member?" archly asked Rose. "Probably the latter circumstance was the cause of the former."

"Yes," she said, "I believe it. How fortunate he is! I endured agony last evening, Rose!" His tone was sad as he said it.

"I should have been the very boon I seemed so earnestly to crave. But you were true to Robin. I was more than satisfied with the result of my trial. And then, what joy filled my breast, with the ringing echo of that sorrowful, yet firm denial of my suit! It was music to me."

"Why, Louis-Louis! Where are you, my boy?" shouted the rich, clear, merry voice of the Count de Clairville, from the terrace; and the next moment he heard his step approaching the library.

"Louis was gone to the village. The marquis and his friend, Count Frederic, walking together on the terrace, were engaged in conversation. The Countess Marie, in one corner, read quietly from a favorite book."

"No—yes! Ah, do not ask me—at least, not now!" laughed the young girl. "Come to my chamber to-night—will you, Helen? or, I will come to yours; it does not matter which; and then I will tell you what I cannot tell you now, here, in this broad daylight, with eyes and ears all about us."

"I have written an article on 'How to Live on $2.50 a Week,'" he explained to the editor. "Well," said the editor, "you had better write the sequel to it."

"What do you think of government ownership?" "I'm in favor of it," answered Senator Sorghum, with emphasis. "I'd like to see the government own everything. My experience has been that it is a great deal easier to get money from the government than from most private concerns."

"I thought it was so," said Rose, in a half-smile. "And, speaking of that same Francis Egerton, do you know, Rose, that I came near being jealous of him on the first evening of my return hither? He seemed continually near you. He seemed chained to your side."

THE CANAL TREATY.

Washington, Nov. 21.—Although the treaty has not been made public, the Associated Press is enabled to give the substance of the document. It consists of between 22 and 25 articles, but the main points of the convention are contained in the first six articles.

In general, it may be said that while the new treaty contains many of the provisions of the rejected Hay-Herran treaty, it is not based on that convention, but follows not only the spirit, but the letter of the Spooner act.

The cities of Panama and Colon retain their municipal autonomy under the republic of Panama so long as they maintain public order and sanitary conditions to the satisfaction of the United States.

The money consideration is the same in the new treaty as in the Hay-Herran convention, with the exception that the $10,000,000 to be paid to Panama instead of to Colombia.
