The Bunchgrasser's Question.

Not many moons ago a Bunchgrasser wandered off down the Stage Road which leads to the Big River where runs the Railroad upon which is carried the Commerce of the Country. The Commerce of the Country might be carried on the Big River at a less rate per ton were it not for Rocks in the River and Snags in the path of a Certain Few Politicians who live at Salem and who, since taking up their residence at that Burg as Patrons of the Public Crib, have adopted the Stage Name of Statesmen. These Certain Few are known to Fame officially and collectively as the State Board of Portage Commissioners but they needed a Stage Name in their Business because they sometimes find it necessary to Play to the Galleries in order to hold their Job. The Rocks in the River are currently reported to have been placed there some 3,000,000 years ago, more or less, as a part of the foundation of Mount Hood and are generally considered pretty Solid Propositions while the biggest Snag in the path of the Certain Few is said to have been placed there at the Last Session of the Legislature and is known as Canal Right of Way. The Certain Few at once declared this Big Snag to be the Proper Stuff and so it has proved if their sole object was to side track the Portage Road—which they had been instructed to construct immediately with funds already provided by the State—and thus keep the Commerce of the Country moving on the Rail Road at the good old fashioned Stiff Rate.

The Bunchgrasser was Simple Minded but he wanted to get Wise so he continued his wanderings to the Big City near the Mouth of the Willamette where dwell many Daily Newspaper Editors, Politicians, Grafters, Footpads and other Wise Men, and upon his arrival there he proceeded to put this question to the Wise Ones: "Why don't they build the Portage?" He first put the question to the Hotel Clerk who stopped polishing his Diamond long enough to direct the seeker after Knowledge to the Editor of a Great Newspaper. The Bunchgrasser found the City Editor in and at once put the question. The City Editor glared at the questioner; "Where are you from," he demanded fiercely. "From Condon," replied the Bunchgrasser. "What difference does it make to you when it's built?" "Well," replied the Bunchgrasser, "I think it will reduce freight rates, develop the country and be a good thing for the people, and I know men at Walla Walla, Arlington, Blalock and other points who think the same as I do. They want a freight rate based on water transportation because they need it in their business." "Oh come off," replied the City Editor. "Don't you know that all the towns you have just named are between The Dalles and Portland? It is Eastern Oregon people need the portage, not you fellows." The Bunchgrasser thanked him for the information and hurried to the office of a rival paper. "Why don't they build the Portage?" he asked of the Telegraph Editor. "Because," was the reply, "they will—when they have to. It's very important but other matters must be considered. There's the canal right of way, a very meritorious (delay) measure. Then the railroads are interested and their rights must be sacredly respected and the politicians are not to be sneezed at. The coyote bounty law died when the portage bill was born so there's no need of getting excited and doing anything rash. Then there never was but four towns in Eastern Oregon, Arlington, the county seat of Gilliam county, Mitchell, the county seat of Wheeler county, Heppner, a mining town on the Canadian Pacific and Fossil, which is known as the Salem of Eastern Oregon. I know this is correct because I got my information partly from a special edition writup of the vintage of 1886 and partly from my own head last time I hit the pipe down at Wong Lee's. Now you see Heppner and Mitchell are no more—wiped out by cloud bursts—Arlington has the county seat and is satisfied and Fossil might get her moral atmosphere polluted by smoke if there were steam boats on the upper river. So what's the use to hurry. There's plenty of time before the country can settle up again and the people fence against those troublesome cloud bursts. But of course we must have the portage and immediately. Portland will not stand for another hour's delay, but it will not do to be hasty." He panned to light a cigarette and the Bunchgrasser, staggering under the load of knowledge he had absorbed, but with an insatiable desire for more, rushed from the room and to the nearest book store where he called for a copy of some good geography of Oregon. The book man shook his head. "I am sorry," he said, "but I dare not let one go. All I have will be needed here this winter among our newspaper men who will try to settle the important question of whether Eastern Oregon is in northern Montana or the southwest corner of the Indian Territory."
