OREGON IN THE LIMELIGHT

Ever since the Lewis and Clark fair at Portland, the state of Oregon has been very prominent in newspaper and magazine articles, while tourists and immigrants have come to our shores in ever increasing numbers. Vice-President Fairbanks from Indiana and Washington has recently been drawing attention to us at this end of the line and Senator Bourne has been making us equally conspicuous at the other end. But what a difference in the motives! One comes among us nursing a Presidential bee in his bonnet under the patronage of "The Interests," whose interests are always inimical to those of the masses; the other attending to the interests of his constituents by remaining at Washington and transacting their business there, incidentally nursing a "second elective" bee for our own "Teddy" whose only interest seems to be "the good of the common people".

They have a gentleman named O'Helle in Birmingham, Alabama, and it's almost a cinch that his name will be taken in vain nearly every time "central" announces the line's busy in that town.

A prominent architect predicts that the day is coming when buildings twice as high as the Washington monument will be erected. When that comes to pass, the poor organ-grinders are going to have a hard time attracting the attention of people on the top floors.

After looking our battleships over, if the Japanese desire any further information as to what they are good for, they can easily obtain it from the Spanish government.

A Cleveland woman kissed a burglar in the dark thinking he was her husband, and discovered her mistake because he had no mustache. In other words she wasn't tickled as much as she expected to be.

A woman writer says courting should continue after marriage. The trouble is that too often it does, and when the man's wife finds it out there's another job for the divorce court lawyer.

While scientists are discussing the important question of "what shall we eat?" the majority of us will stow away just what the cooks see fit to provide.

A homeless cat in Cleveland is reported to have succeeded in committing suicide after four attempts. And undoubtedly there were plenty of persons in Cleveland who would have been glad to help it make the first attempt a success.
