COURT CONDON, NO. 54, F. OF A. MEETS Mondays evening of each month in Armory Hall, lodge room. Visiting brothers are requested to meet with us. A warm welcome awaits you.

The registration books are now open. Don't overlook this matter for it's the important question of the day.

In spite of the reduced cost of transportation in many states, the railroads manage to furnish the same quality of accidents.

The Comptroller of the Currency says that the wealth of the United States amounts to $1300 per capita. We are not questioning the figures any, but there seems to be some sort of congestion in the circulating department.

Higgledy-piggledy cold storage plant,

Turns out eggs when the black hen can't;
Sometimes a million, sometimes more,
And the quality drops as the prices soar.

Organized labor in Tacoma is preparing to wage a great fight against the incoming of cheap Oriental labor. The Seventh Annual Convention of the State Federation of Labor opens in that city this week and some definite policy or outline of policy will be framed to keep out the Orientals.

Congressman W. R. Ellis spent a few days in Pendleton last week, having come from the national capital to register and see that his petition as a candidate to succeed himself is properly launched. While in Portland the Congressman did not have much to say except that things were humming over in Washington. He is still working for the creation of an Eastern Oregon district for the United States court and in following out his plan has introduced a bill creating the district, while, to make double sure Senator Fulton has introduced a similar bill in the senate. This time Ellis is to have formidable opposition for the nomination in the Second Congressional District, for while he has been in Washington during the past few weeks a number of men have declared their desire for the office. Ellis has been trying to find out just how many of these people mentioned are seriously figuring on coming out for the nomination and which have strength and what kind of strength. The strongest of these is no doubt Geer, although as yet Geer has not committed himself on the subject. Geer is waiting to see if the office is hunting him, while "Eastern Oregon's grand old man" is not taking any chances of that sort and is out hunting for the office.

Lost—An army belt pin. Has the insignia of the U. S. Army on it, spread eagle etc. Finder please return to this office.

CHOICE MISCELLANY

What is an Electron?

All physicists seem now to agree that the atom—or what goes by that name—may safely be defined as a unit built up of electrons. The problem is the electron. What is it? As the Paris Cosmos sums up one definition, the electron is a particle of matter carrying a charge of electricity, negative electricity. "But other scientists prefer to call the electron a disembodied charge of negative electricity, pure and simple." These two views are distinct. They may be in reality identical. It all depends upon the nature of electricity, of which we are in a state of ignorance as dense as ever.

"But even if we leap over the difficulty we are not much nearer a definite conception of the modern atom. Whether it consists of a central body surrounded by a ring of electrons or whether the electrons are immersed in the central body, like plums in a pudding, are alternatives of which any one may at present take his choice, for the truth is that the materials are not sufficient for a decision." But the discussion on the constitution of the electron with which the scientific press is for the moment filled has been valuable in bringing out two points. The first is that a vital change must be made in our conception of the atom. The next is that physical science cannot inform us what that change must be.—Current Literature.

Mummified Hawks.

Archaeologists have been delving for many years in the sands of Egypt, and their labors have unearthed many strange finds. But it remained for excavators within the last year to discover something which has hitherto not been met with in these subterranean explorations. These singular finds were made last season at Abydos, in upper Egypt, by the institution of British Archaeology, represented by Professor Garstang and his colleagues. Inside huge jars of earthenware were found the bodies of hawks which had been preserved from Ptolemaic times by being mummified much in the same manner as the human bodies recovered from the tombs of the lands of the pharaohs. These little hawks are said to present a very strange appearance, with their beaks pecking out from the cross strappings which envelop them. Another find was the cemetery of the times of the Ptolemies' rule in Egypt (323 B. C. to the death of Cleopatra, 30 B. C.), in which the mummified birds were discovered.

The Weighing Fad.

Two men entered a Broadway restaurant and after putting a question to the head waiter went out again. "What did they want?" asked a customer. "They wanted to know if we have scales here so they could weigh themselves before beginning to eat. That seems to be a fad nowadays with dietitians who are concerned as much with the quantity as well as the quality of the food they eat. They allow themselves a certain number of ounces each meal. They are not content with weighing the food, but jump on to the scales themselves before and after eating to make sure that they neither overdo nor underdo the process of feeding. Unfortunately we are not prepared to so exactly gauge the indulgence of a man's appetite. They assured me that several other restaurants are so equipped, so they went on to look for one."—New York Sun.

The Man of Nature.

"Meva, the man of nature," who is an ardent apostle of the "simple life," was fined recently in Paris for selling picture post cards in the streets without a license. Owing to the singular carb he wears he was taken before the court on a second charge of masquerading. But the court held that the law against masquerading applied only to the wearing of men's clothes by women and women's clothes by men, and Meva was acquitted. Meva goes about the streets wearing only one garment, a long white flannel dressing gown tied round him by a cord. He wears sandals and is bareheaded. His hair, which falls on his shoulders, is tied back with a bit of ribbon. His beard flows halfway down to his waist, and he carries a long staff. He lives on nuts, fruits and raw vegetables.

Dangerous Wrapping Paper.

In an article by Dr. Freudenberg published in the Munich Medicinische Wochenschrift the attention of the public is directed to the fact that wrapping paper is a fruitful vehicle for germ diseases. The writer says that there can be no doubt of the fact that paper is one of the best breeding places for the disease germs and that the habit of moistening the thumb or forefinger or both with the lips when a piece of paper is taken up by a packer often plants the disease germs where they may do much harm. "Think," he says, "of the grocer or the butcher following this unclean but widespread custom. The custom should be cried down by the public, and the law should aid in its suppression."

A Marquis' Hat.

The man with the biggest, curliest and glossiest silk hat in London is the Marquis de Leuville. To see one of his lordship's hats was recently our privilege, and, although the size is but a seven, the height of the crown and width of the brim are astonishing, but shown the same hat in a photograph of the wearer it did not look at all out of place. This was accounted for by the fact that the Marquis de Leuville stands six feet two inches, is forty-six inches round the chest and weighs seventeen stone.—London Outfitter.
