COURT CONDON, NO. 54, F. OF A. MEETS Mondays evening of each month in Armory Hall lodge room. Visiting brothers are requested to meet with us. A warm welcome awaits you.

Another town has been engulfed, not by a volcano but by the march of commercialism. Jonah-like Bingen has been swallowed up by White Salmon, both are neighboring towns in Washington, on the new north bank railroad and a little above Hood River. But to return to our analogy—well, it cannot be carried out much further for the prospects of Bingen to be free again are decidedly meager. To realize that a few crates of strawberries have brought about the blotting away of their home town from the railroad map, is the regretful reality that the Bingen people are now facing. Bingen has lost its station; worse than that it has lost its own name and henceforth it is to be known as White Salmon. The Enterprise published in the latter town rejoices and says: "At last White Salmon has been placed on the railroad map. On the first of the month, the railroad company changed the name of Bingen station to White Salmon and every body is happy." It was the fame of the White Salmon country as a fruit-producing and shipping point that influenced the railroad company to make the change in name.

Frank A. Welch, secretary of the Oregon State Board of Agriculture, is mailing copies of the Oregon state fair premium list for 1908. The program is most attractive and prizes reach nearly $15,000. Many new exhibitors are securing space and several herds have been purchased to be exhibited at the fair; entries in the racing department are larger and consist of a better class of horses than ever before raced in the northwest. At Salem, September 14 to 19, inclusive.
