COURT CONDON, NO. 54, F. OF A. MEETS Mondays evening of each month in Armory Hall lodge rooms. Visiting brothers are requested to meet with us. A warm welcome awaits you.

It is not thought that Gilliam county wheat growers will attempt to sow the new Alaska wheat which is reported as giving such phenomenal yields. There are other kinds of wheat which can be grown here with marked success without farmers branching out into unsatisfactory experiments. In the vicinity of Pendleton wheat growers have taken a fancy to a variety, known as the Dale Glory which is a good yielder and thrives in dry soil. Experimental farms in each county are practically out of the realm of feasibility at this time in the history of the state. The state is maintaining two experiment stations, one at Corvallis and another at Union, for the benefit of Oregon farmers. County experimental stations are costly at best and many of their investigations and endeavors are often in the line of mere experiments. It is not so with the state experimental stations, they do valuable research work and conduct experiments that are of practical value. Dr. James Withycombe, director of the Oregon Experiment Station at Corvallis, cautions Oregon wheat growers, saying that while he has not had the opportunity of seeing the "Alaskan" wheat grown, it corresponds very closely with the characteristics of a variety of wheat known as "Egyptian" wheat. "This wheat has been grown on a small scale at this station for some years, and we find it of little commercial value. Hence we suggest that our farmers do not become too enthusiastic over this new wheat until its merits have been more fully and conclusively demonstrated," says he.

A rather busy week, this was. Harvesting in full blast, revival meetings in progress, a big tent vaudeville medicine show, a moving-picture show, and a three night engagement by a theatrical company were among the attractions offered to Condonites since our last issue. All the entertainments were well patronized, too. Condon is winning a reputation as a "good show town." To maintain it, Condon must let it be known that it will not patronize "bum" traveling theatrical aggregations.

A reader stopped the editor on the street the other day. "See here, what are you fellows up to, now, in your last issue you were boosting for Arlington." The editor was on the scent of a news item, excused himself and passed on. A little farther the editor was accosted again by a subscriber. Well to be brief, we're too busy to answer such questions. Arlington is in Gilliam county and besides Brother Norvel says it's a good place in which to live. And we say, as the little pigs remarked to the old sow: "We ain't no hogs."

Keep the Mayville fair in mind.

A Bulletin issued by the Oregon Agricultural College experiment station and prepared especially for distribution among the farmers who attended the lectures given on the Farming Demonstration train provided by the O. R. & N. in a cooperative effort with the O.A.C. and the Experiment Station to direct attention to improved methods of husbandry adaptable to the agricultural conditions of Eastern Oregon, has been received by The Globe. The pamphlet contains a resume of the lectures and makes interesting reading. Many of the farmers in and near Condon who attended the lectures will, with the aid of this bulletin, be able to refresh their memories and obtain valuable hints.
