Chas. Hein, of the Buckhorn country, was in town yesterday, and to The Globe man told the story of the storm in his neighborhood as follows: "I was working on the Mattingly ranch, which I have rented, harvesting with a combined harvester while the storm was brewing. It came so suddenly that we just had enough time to unhitch the large number of horses and get them to the barn. So quick and fast were the flashes of lightning that it kept us all busy dodging. Martin Johnson, a harvest hand, who was unharnessing the horses near the barn, as well as my daughter Emma, who was helping, were both struck with lightning. Neither were injured, but my daughter suffered a severe headache during the night while the flashes continued. A calf tied near the barn was also struck and continued to bawl for a half hour." Mr. Hein went on to say that the storm carried everything before it in the Thirty-mile canyon and that he worked one hour in rolling rocks in one place in order to make a fill to get his wagon over safely.

What the New Road Will Do.

All of the central Oregon district from Condon south and tributary to the proposed line of the Wasco County Electric & Water Power company will be vastly benefited by the new line, according to J. E. Hunt, former state senator from Multnomah county and now a prominent hardware merchant of Condon.

"There are now about four towns in Eastern Oregon that can beat Condon out a little bit," said Mr. Hunt last night, but if that road is completed as soon as it is said it will be, there will be none that Condon can not boast over within a couple of years. It is to be the terminal of the new line and will naturally be the center of a large trading business as soon as the road is in operation and the produce of the country is moved over it.

"Adjacent to the new line as it is now proposed are vast wheat fields, immense stock ranges, coal deposits and gold mining districts. All of these products will be brought on the road to Condon, the terminal of the line and the town will prosper because of the added trade.

"But it is not to Condon alone that the line will be a benefit," continued Mr. Hunt. "The whole district will be the gainer. The wheat of the country, the stock, the coal, which is of good quality, and the gold ore, will all be shipped out over the line and be able to find a market where it is now practically impossible because of the rugged nature of the country and the lack of transportation."

Mr. Hunt is enthusiastic over the future of that section and says it will be one of the best parts of the state as soon as the last spike of rail transportation is driven and the new line is open to traffic.—Oregon Sunday Journal.

FAIRS FOR FARMERS.

(Concluded from first page.)

At The Dalles.

Large, noisy, posters have been scattered the past week throughout this section announcing the annual fair to be held at the Dalles, October 6 to 10, inclusive. The posters are replete with attractions, some of which may not take place but if the fair of a year ago is taken as a criterion there will be plenty of amusement for all. The king of Oregon street fair entertainers has again secured the contract "to deliver the goods" in the amusement line and will have charge of the street carnival features. Besides the fruit and livestock exhibits there will be broncho riding contests and a rather attractive racing program will appeal to lovers of horse flesh.

At Salem.

The Oregon State Fair for 1908 will be held at Salem during the week beginning September 14. The Oregon fair is the leading agricultural exposition on the Pacific coast. Special efforts have been put forth to make the coming fair the greatest in the history of the organization. Extended classification of livestock, increased premiums and additional conveniences for exhibitors in all department will assure greater displays which should be seen by large crowds during fair week. Leading stockmen of Oregon and the Pacific Northwest have expended time and money in the betterment of their herds and flocks, and many of them have signified their intention to show their best animals at the Salem fair next month.
