COURT CONDON, NO. 4, F. OF A. MEETS Mondays evening of each month in Armory Hall, lodge room. Visiting brothers are requested to meet with us. A warm welcome awaits you.

Condon is doing herself an injustice by not having houses to rent. People are calling at the real estate and newspaper offices every day in search of dwelling houses but there is none to be had. Local capital might profitably be invested in houses and cottages that would yield good returns. Many newcomers can not on first arriving build a home for their families. They want to assure themselves that climatic conditions will be satisfactory, school advantages good and work available for the head of the family. Condon's climate is healthy and salubrious, the educational advantages are excellent and there is considerable work to be had. If Condon is to enjoy her full share of the immigration that is coming to Oregon, she must be ready to care for the new arrivals.

In another week the Oregon colleges will open their doors to the student world. Already a number of Gilliam county young men and women have decided what institution they will attend during the coming year. Some go to complete courses of study began some years ago; others will enter college for the first time. Ambitious young men and women can readily see what an adjunct a college education will be to their success. Oregon is fortunate in having a number of strong, private colleges besides the state university and the agricultural college. Small colleges have many advantages for they seem to meet more completely the needs of bringing the pupil into closer touch with his teachers; an element which is lacking in a great measure in the larger institutions. The letting out of the contract some weeks since for a new $50,000 main building, modernly equipped on the Willamette university campus, has once again brought that splendid institution to public notice. Standing as it does as the pioneer educational institution in the northwest, it has an enviable record. Since 1848, "Old Willamette" has been closely allied with the development of the northwest country. Its students and alumni are scattered throughout the western states doing their humble part in building up the commonwealth. With increased facilities, hundreds of young people are to go forth from her college walls well equipped for life's battles.

The country press has been besieged the past few weeks with a new "gag" alleged to be a "news service" consisting of weekly letters. The latest is the cranium evolution of a couple of reporters on one of the Portland papers; another is conducted by a reporter on a Salem paper. It's a popular movement among underpaid city pencil-pushers. The country press has sufficient good, live, local news matter to make its columns interesting without having to resort to the publication of this copyrighted "stuff." Country newspapers know where to find feature and special articles. These alleged news services have no more reason for existence than barnacles on a ship.
