Aiding Dry-Land Farmers.

The Department of Agriculture and the Interior Department have agreed to establish and equip an experiment farm on the Umatilla irrigation project to assist farmers in properly developing their land. The Washington dispatch bringing the news of this proposed aid to the irrigators also says that Professor Kerr has secured from the Agricultural Department a promise to co-operate with the state in establishing an experiment station for dry-land farming in Morrow, Gilliam or Sherman county. While the methods of dry farming and irrigated farming are vastly different, both have the same end in view. The purpose of each is to bring into a productive state vast tracts of rich land which at the present time are non-productive. In many localities it is absolutely necessary that water be secured in order to produce a crop, and, even in other semi-arid localities, water would greatly enhance the value of the land.

But throughout the Pacific Northwest there are vast tracts of semi-arid land that, with proper cultivation and a thorough knowledge of the work on the part of the farmer, can be made to turn out very good crops without the aid of irrigation. The Oregon Agricultural College has on its staff a number of dry farming experts who have had practical experience covering many years in farming districts, where the amount of natural moisture was much less than it is in the dry regions of the Pacific Northwest, and where water for irrigating purposes was unavailable. With an experimental farm where practical demonstrations of dry-farming methods can be made, these experts can do an inestimable amount of good.

Irrigation, of course, where the supply of water is ample, can be made the most certain method of farming known, but the dry farming lands east of the Cascade Mountains have a wonderful future, and in years to come, when the science of conservation of natural moisture in the soil is thoroughly understood, surprising results will follow. The Umatilla irrigation experiment farm will prove of great value to the state and to the projects in adjoining states, but its advantages cannot excel those which will follow a thorough understanding of dry farming in the Pacific Northwest.—Oregonian.

Congressman Longworth has worked a great reformation in the character of his wife, the president's daughter, according to a statement made by Dr. L.B. Sperry in Des Moines, Iowa, a few days ago before the Y. M. C. A. "Longworth told a friend of mine recently," said Sperry, "that he had succeeded in reducing the number of cigarettes smoked by his wife from 40 to 20 daily."

How many property owners have repaired their sidewalks since the order for such has been issued by the city council? What have you done about yours? This is a personal question but it must be attended to or the city marshal will do it it for you and you will have to foot the bill. The condition of the sidewalks of Condon is a sad thing to think about, a constant knock to the city when a stranger must walk on them, and worse yet the walks are a constant danger to yourself and other residents of the city. Those missing boards, and the broken ones waiting for a chance to trip some one as well as the number of nails which should be hammered down, are all a regular nightmare to pedestrians and at any time might prove to be the cause of a serious damage suit against the city. It is to be hoped that the city marshal will not stop his work of forcing sidewalk repairs until every delapidated walk in town is put in first-class condition. Do it for appearences sake, if not for your own safety!
