COURT CONDON, NO. 34, F. OF A. MEETS
Mondays evening of each month in Armory Hall lodge room. Visiting brothers are requested to meet with us. A warm welcome awaits you.

If you are a kicker and see the shadows of failure in everything that is proposed to help the town, for heaven's sake go into some secluded canyon and kick your own shadow on the clay bank, and give the men who are working to build up the town a chance. One long-faced, hollow-eyed, whining, capping, chronic kicker can do more to keep away business and capital from a town than all the drouths, short crops, chinch bugs, cyclones and blizzards combined.

The president calls attention to the growing deficiency in the postal service. He fails to mention a leading cause—the printing of envelopes by the government absolutely free, which is unfair and wholly unjustifiable, compelling the people at large to pay the bills of a select few. The government has no more right to furnish envelopes at cost and print them free than it has to furnish us print paper at cost and do our press work free. Will the publishers ever rise up and stop the outrage?

Portland takes fourth place among cities of the United States in wheat exports for the 11 months of the current year ending with November. This is according to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on breadstuffs exported from this country. Puget Sound comes next after Portland. New York is first, Philadelphia second and Duluth third. Last year Portland ranked second in the country in wheat shipments. The figures just compiled of wheat exports do not include large shipments of wheat from Portland to California. This tonnage is very heavy each year.

No State in the union is experiencing a greater transition period at the present time than Oregon. It has ever been prominent as a commonwealth since its admission into the union on February 14, 1859. Prior to that its bustling activity, first as a frontier community and later a territory rich in resources inviting settlement, kept it much in the public eye. No more interesting pages in the history of American pioneer days are to be found than those which deal with the Oregon country. It was on August 14, 1848, that that Oregon was organized as a territory and by successive acts of congress passed on March 2, 1853, March 3, 1863, May 26, 1863, and July 25, 1868, Washington, Idaho, Montana and Wyoming were separated in order named.

Oregon still remains, however, the largest of the Pacific Northwest states and its vast expanse of 96,030 square miles, or 61,459,200 acres, offers no end of opportunity for commercial, industrial, and agricultural development over and above that already realized. The state extends from east to west a distance of 360 miles while 290 miles between its northern and southern borders. Three mountain ranges traverse the state from north to south, the Coast range, which parallels the Pacific coast line, and of which the altitude is 4000 feet; the Cascades, 100, 150 miles inland, that rise to a height of 6000 to 12,000 feet and divide the state into the two great eastern and western districts, and the Blue mountains near the eastern border, which are from 3000 to 10,000 in height.

The 34 countries of the state harbor a population of 800,000 people and that number is being rapidly increased each year by the influx of homeseekers from the eastern states attracted by the opportunities offered in field and forest. The several cities and towns of the state have hit upon a plan of organized boosting conducive to the more rapid development of Oregon. The mountain ranges separate eastern from western Oregon. The 13 counties included in the north western division border for the most part on the Columbia and Willamette rivers. The famous Willamette valley, which is 150 miles long and 60 miles wide and includes 5,000,000 acres, is dotted with thriving cities and towns which are accessible to the productive farms for which the valley is noted. A mild climate and a fertile soil are largely responsible for the agricultural achievements of the valley which also has the advantage of transportation facilities.

Southern Oregon includes the five counties of Douglas, Coos, Curry, Josephine and Jackson, which are quite separated from the Willamette valley. The forests and mineral deposits of the mountains and the fertile soil in the valleys combine to offer great opportunity.

Eastern Oregon comprises an immense district east of the Cascades some 64,000 square miles in extent, and including approximately two thirds of the entire area of the state. Here is located the great range land famous as a stockraising district. Here is to be found a vast area of land ultimately to become the greatest grain growing section of the country, once the dual charm of irrigation and transportation is worked. A number of reclamation projects already completed have shown the marvelous results of modern irrigation methods followed by modern and scientific farming, and more than justify the rapid progress of the work which will pave the way from the transformation of many an arid waste into a prosperous territory rich in the production of fruit and grain.

To date the government reclamation service has sent approximately $3,000,000 in Oregon in the development of two irrigation projects involving more than 200,000 acres of land. While neither of these projects are finished to date, their influence has given an impetus to a general movement by way of the artificial application of water to the soil. Vast sums have been expended by individual enterprise in the substitution of orchard field and garden for the sagebrush desert.

The great central area of the state has too long been isolated from the outside world because of lack of satisfactory transportation facilities. The spell is now broken and the year's end of 1909 sees the frantic race of the rival Hill and Harriman lines well under way. Once this vast district is tapped by railroads, the development of its latent possibilities will be but a matter of the shortest possible time, and the benefits will go to swell the wealth and happiness of the Beaver state.

While the first century of Oregon's life as a state has been marked by great progress, the experience of recent years has been such as to prompt the universal prediction that the development of the next 50 years will be little short of marvelous once reasonable advantage is taken of the remarkable natural resources that invite exploitation. The opportunities are here. A progressive citizenship is now wide awake to the fact. Scientific knowledge is teaching the best methods of improving the land, of tilling the soil, of working the mine, of handling the forest and of harnessing the stream. The inevitable conclusion is a Greater Oregon.
