Up-to-date Well Driller

You are going to have a well drilled and you are figuring on having H. H. Wilburn do the drilling for you as he is the most successful well man that was ever in this part of the country. We would advise you to write or call and see him at once as he is finishing up all the wells he has in sight. Mr. Wilburn says he is receiving inquiries almost every day from other localities and they want him to move right away and go to work, so have him do the work before it is too late.

An Old Welsh Custom.

The kindling of bonfires on hills is the simplest of celebrations at any time. The Druids made four great fires at their festivals in February, May, August and November. Wales seems to have been a country especially tenacious of this custom. Each family used to make its own fire, and as it was dying out each member would throw a white stone into it, the stones being marked for future identification. Then all said their prayers and went to bed, and in the morning they tried to find all the stones again. If any stone was missing it betokened that the owner of it would die within a year. Some superstitions are pretty and picturesque and attractive. This was one of the many which were cruel as well as picturesque. It would take but a slight accident to cause a fright that might be actually dangerous to a superstitious person, and it would not be hard for an enemy of such a person to cause that fright by stealing his stone from the fire.

A Roman Dinner.

A Roman dinner at the house of a wealthy man consisted chiefly of three courses. All sorts of stimulants to the appetite were first served up, and eggs were indispensable to the first course. Among the various dishes we may instance the guinea hen, pheasant, nightingale and the thrush as birds most in repute. The Roman gourmands held peacocks in great estimation, especially their tongues. Macrobius states that they were first eaten by Hortensius, the orator, and acquired such repute that a single peacock was sold for 50 denarii, the denarius being equal to about eightpence halfpenny of English money.—Chambers' Journal.

Saved by His Wits.

The Duke of Wellington once met by accident an officer in a state of inebriety.
"Look here, sir," said the Iron Duke, "What would you do if you met one of your men in the condition in which I find you?"
The officer drew himself up, gave the military salute and replied with great gravity, "I would not condescend to speak to the brute." His wit saved him his commission.

Appreciation.

"Father," said little Rollo, "was George Washington a greater man than Santa Claus?"
"I won't say, my son, that he was greater, but he has proved much less expensive."—Washington Star.

Unanswered.

"Say, pop, may I ask you a question?"
"Yes, Teddy. What is it?"
"When a man's finished milkin' a cow, how does he turn off the milk?"

Our life is short, but to expand that span to vast eternity is virtue's work.

AN EASTER SERMON

By GRACE ETHEL WEEKS

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

The Rev. Tom Howard was not cut out for a clergyman. He was Tom at school, Tom in college and Tom in the theological seminary. He was a good fellow whom everybody loved, a big framed, big hearted man who should have followed an active career. He had stood low in his classes while in college, but had redeemed himself on the football gridiron, carrying his university colors to victory on his own heroic shoulders.

When Tom accepted his first call he tried extemporaneous sermons. They were not satisfactory. Members of his congregation hinted to him that they would prefer written sermons. This was a blow to him. In college he had usually secured the services of some student possessing literary gifts to write his essays for him. He returned to that plan.

Howard skirmished till he secured the name of a clergyman living in a small town distant from the city in which he himself lived who made a practice of writing sermons for other incumbents of pulpits. Tom thought it a pity that this man was born with the ability to write not only his own sermons, but those of other people, while he, poor fellow, was not able even to write his own. There was something pathetic in this big broad shouldered fellow, in the vigor of his youth, strong as an ox, not being able to get up a homily that would require a brief twenty minutes to deliver.

Howard wrote the Rev. Egbert Ingelhart asking if he would sell him sermons. Ingelhart replied that he would and named his price. Howard agreed to pay it and ordered half a dozen sermons. They were sent within a fortnight, and Howard was delighted with them. After delivering one of them many of his congregation surrounded him, pouring forth congratulations that he had found the true method of getting up his sermons. Mr. Howard congratulated himself that he had. At the same time he felt somewhat uncomfortable at having his abilities supplied by another.

There were certain points in the sermons that were very unlike Mr. Howard, a feminine tenderness at times more befitting a reverend cream cheese than a reverend athlete. Howard wrote Mr. Ingelhart about it, and Ingelhart asked him to send him his photograph. The photograph was sent, and Mr. Ingelhart asked: "Why didn't you send it before? Now I know what kind of a man you are and can write for you accordingly."

The next sermon received was a Thanksgiving address to be delivered on the date of a great football match between two prominent universities. It was bristling with such expressions as "fight the good fight," "smote them hip and thigh" and "conquer by the Lord's help." In delivering it the minister was in his element, and his sermon was voted a brilliant success.

From that time forward Howard continued to grow in favor with his flock. Most of the girls in the congregation set their caps for him. But there is safety in numbers. Besides, the clergyman didn't fancy any of them. However, he received many hints that the church would prefer a married pastor, and he began to think he must marry or find another field of labor. Thinking that one who had helped him out so well with his sermons might be equally serviceable in a matter of matrimony, he wrote Mr. Ingelhart, with whom he had become quite intimate through correspondence, of his dilemma and asked him if he knew of any girl who would make a good clergyman's wife. Ingelhart replied that there were a number of fine young women in his parish and if he would come up Ingelhart would give him a chance to look them over. Howard replied that he would go up for a brief visit in Lent, because he wished to talk over a sermon for Easter that would bear upon the duty of the young men of his congregation to marry. This would include himself, but he was doing his own duty in looking for a wife.

So during the second week in Lent, Howard, having secured a classroom in the seminary to take his place at daily services for a day or two, went to visit Ingelhart. He had expected that as a matter of course his reverend brother would invite him to stay at his house. But he received no such invitation and on arrival went to a hotel. The same morning he called on Ingelhart.

"Please step into the study," said the maid who admitted him.

Howard passed into the study and saw a girl writing at a desk.

"Beg pardon," he said. "I supposed I should find your father in here."

"You are Mr. Howard. I know you from the photograph you sent me."

"Sent you?"

"Yes; I pass as Egbert Ingelhart. That was my father's name. I have written the sermons sent you."

The big man looked down on the girl, and a hot blush spread over his face. The girl looked amused.

"You desire me to help you to find a wife," she said.

"No, I don't—that is, if you will accept the situation yourself. With a wife to write my sermons I can fight the devil most advantageously."

The Easter sermon was delivered, and it was a splendid effort, and many of the young men were converted to matrimony. As to the girls, not one in the congregation needed conversion.

Just before the benediction, the pastor announced his engagement.
