Since the advent of the Big Christmas Edition last Friday afternoon the Globe office has been recipient of many fine and appreciated compliments for the work done on that excellent number. Several hundred extra copies were mailed from this office. Others were mailed by our many friends and subscribers bringing the total up to 1,000 copies. The advertising value of this edition alone is inestimable, sufficient to say that at least 5000 pairs of eyes will scan its column in search of information regarding the county and town. A live and up-to-date newspaper can do much for the upbuilding of any city and if Condon and Gilliam County do not receive their full share of the increase in population and developments it will be no fault of the Globe's.

The Oregon Agricultural College will commence its annual special short courses for farmers on January 3 and the instruction to be offered this year is probably the best since these courses were started several years ago. Experts in the various branches have been secured and the special work will extend over a period of six weeks.

ESSAY ON GILLIAM COUNTY.

By John Dunn

Gilliam Co. has long since gained for itself the distinction of being the "Land of Opportunity."

It is situated in the eastern part of Oregon. The topography might be said to be rolling or table lands permeated in various directions by various canyons, and beautiful streams.

Although one of the smallest Counties of Oregon in point of area, it is a land of big things in other respects.

In 1866 the first permanent settlers began to straggle in, stout of frame and heart, clean of conscience, adventurous, but full of purpose were these men and women who here made themselves humble homes and began the slow and toilsome task of civilization.

They plowed and reaped adding little by little to cultivated areas, buildings, livestock and progeny. They built rude school houses and churches, they had plenty of necessities but no luxuries. They endured many hardships, but enjoyed a healthful, hopeful, and simple life among nature's profusions.

In the long summer days the soft breezes fanned into motion the tall bunch grass and heavy headed yellow grain and in the dark but mild winter the cabin firelight flashed out in the evening on gumboots, rifle and spinning wheel.

So they toiled, suffered and rejoiced while hewing out the foundation stone of Gilliam Co.

Some yet remain to entertain us with tales of the early days, and to wonder at Time's transformation. But ere long the light will have passed from the last eyes that looked out over the "Land of Opportunity."

Farming is the greatest industry of the county at the present time and in the various phases always will be. The farms at the present time consist of holdings from 160 to 3000 acres, the average ranch having about 320 acres.

The principal product of the farm is wheat which is raised in abundance, the fertile soil yielding an average of from 20 to 50 bushels per acre.

The largest crop in the history of the county was in 1907 giving Condon, the county seat, the distinction of being the largest primary wheat shipping point in the United States.

A reduction of the size of farms and greater diversity of crops both of which are possible and rational will make Gilliam County one of the most densely populated sections in Oregon.

Taking every feature of this County into consideration it offers exceptional advantages to every class of homeseekers.

Favored not only by climatic and other physical conditions the district possesses the character of soil which does not wear out. Through-out the county the earth is composed of volcanic ash, deep and fertile. It holds that peculiar characteristic unknown in the east of retaining moisture in the sub-strata, and while the surface may be dry the roots are plentifully nourished, notwithstanding appearances to the contrary.

Severe storms, destructive to life and property are unknown. It is the one spot where natural conditions are ideal and where one may feel the warm south winds of the winter season and the cool western winds in summer.

No where are soil and climate better adapted to guarantee large and speedy returns to capital seeking investment.

Gilliam County offers superior inducement to the immigrant whether he possesses money or not, for the moneyed man will find ample opportunity for safe investment, and the moneyless man will find nature with all her varied capabilities ready to respond to the touch of the toiler's hand.

If you want to profitably invest money or if you want such a home as Mother Nature has provided for her children who are willing to work, come to this region of Opportunity.

If you want to spend some money in the line of stock or land speculation, come to Gilliam County. If you want to be a resident of the "Wheat City" of Eastern Oregon, come to Condon the one town which is exceptionally blessed with educational advantages having a splendid High School modern and well equipped Sisters Academy and good Grammar School.

The Star of Empire is still wending its way westward. The ever increasing population of the eastern and middle states is constantly augmenting competition and the struggle for a livelihood becomes more tense as the density of inhabitants increase.

The realization that greater opportunities await boys in the far west compels the reiteration of Horace Greely's advice, "Go West Young Man."

The present rate of influx from the east is an indication that Gilliam County will house and home thousands of people.
