The Retiring County Officials.

Sheriff Rogers having turned the keys of office over to Elmer Montague, is again a private citizen. He has not yet decided what he will do in the future, but at present is with his mother at Corvallis. It is probably within the bounds of truth to say that Gilliam County never had a sheriff who combined fitness with popularity to a greater extent than Ray Rogers. We have had some good sheriffs too. Johnson filled this difficult office with high credit, and Sanderson was an especially good official. But some way Rogers seemed to suit more people and to discharge his official duties in a more satisfactory manner. He took great interest in his work. He has been courteous itself yet firm in the discharge of his duty. We do not doubt but what if he had asked for the office again he could have had it without an effort. The democrats could scarcely have afforded to refuse the nomination and no republican could have run within forty rods of him. In retiring from office Mr. Rogers will have the hearty good will of all Gilliam County and wish that health and prosperity may attend him all his days.

Another official who retired from office the first of the year is County Judge Dunn. At the time Mr. Dunn announced his intention of declining renomination, the Globe, as a public organ, thanked him for his untiring efforts in behalf of the welfare of Gilliam county during the past eight years. At the same time we gave a report of the condition of the affairs of the county at the beginning of his term of office and also of their condition at the time he declined renomination; which report reflected unlimited credit upon the official guidance of Mr. Dunn. Further comment is unnecessary at this time sufficient to say that Mr. Dunn is deserving of unstinted thanks from every taxpayer in Gilliam County.

From the time of his appointment by the County Court to fill the position made vacant by the resignation of B. T. Snell, C. C. Clark of Arlington has served the citizens of Gilliam County in a manner that is worthy of commendation, and he will be remembered as one who looked to the interests of the many rather than the interests of the few.

Ninety-five cities in this country are now reported as having adopted the commission form of government. There may be some in which it has not given satisfaction, though as yet we have heard of no such instance. On the whole it certainly approximates the ideal method. No method springs perfect from the deviser's brain, but must pass the ordeal of application to reveal its weak points as well as its strong ones. But the experiments thus far vindicate the plan as excelling at every point any and all methods heretofore employed for the government of municipalities.

Montana, the home of Clark, and Daley and Thomas H. Carter, is now to join the ranks of the progressive and follow the political lead of Oregon. Governor Norris has sent a message to the Montana Legislature in which he asks for the adoption of the direct primary and of the "Oregon Plan" for electing United States Senators. If half the reports published about the political history of Montana are true, then it is time that state started a reform movement by adopting progressive systems of Government, whereby the people can speak for themselves.

The merchant who does not advertise is either ashamed of his wares or ashamed of himself. In either case it is well for the buying public to leave him alone:

At a meeting of the County Court of Wheeler County this month P. P. Petty was declared a county charge, says the Journal, and was authorized to take a bath and have his hair cut. Some generosity to that.

We might call attention to one fact that the regular readers of THE GLOBE are well aware of, but newcomers may not have noticed—you will never find in these columns any patent medicine ads, unless, perchance, some of our home druggists put up standard preparations, the ingredients of which are no secret and are not harmful. Such headlines as "Asleep at the switch," "Died in the night," "An awful death," and such like cheering information are never found in these columns—never were, never will be. And we say it with a good deal of pride, particularly when we see some of our contemporaries using these ads to fill up their editorial space.

Oregon found a brick in its Christmas stocking when the reclamation apportionment was announced, giving this state but $925,000 to carry on uncompleted irrigation projects out of the appropriation of $20,000,000, despite the large contribution of Oregon to the reclamation fund. The Oregon Development League and Portland Commercial Club have taken joint action to secure a re-apportionment, so that this state may secure its just share to continue reclamation work.

This is the season of the year when our farmer friends have the spare time to discuss, thru these columns any and all matters that concern the rural population. Why not take a hand in such discussions and utilize to the advantage of the farming class the free space allotted to you in the Globe without money and without price. The farmers of Gilliam county are intelligent and are just as capable of handling questions that concern agriculture as our city people are to discuss social, moral, political and municipal questions. Take a try at it anyway and help to advance the material prosperity of the field and farm section of the county.
