TIPPING AN ARTIST.

He Got His Fee, Too, Before He Gave Up the Information Wanted.

Winslow Homer was a great painter who had the unusual good fortune to have his merit appreciated early in life. But no one ever presumed less on a wide reputation. Affection was a weakness from which his sense of humor saved him.

In his biography by Mr. W. H. Downs is printed the story of a New York gentleman of wealth and artistic tastes who made the journey to Scarborough, Me., where Homer had his studio, to make the artist's acquaintance.

On his arrival he found the studio door locked. The owner was nowhere to be seen. He wandered about the cliffs for awhile until he met a man in a rough old suit of clothes, rubber boots and a battered hat, who carried a fishpole. He accosted the fisherman thus:

"Say, my man, if you can tell me where I can find Winslow Homer I have a quarter for you."

"Where's your quarter?" said the fisherman.

He handed it over and was astounded to hear the quizzical Yankee fisherman say, "I am Winslow Homer."

The sequel of this unusual introduction was that Homer took his new acquaintance back to the studio, entertained him and before he left sold him a picture.

EYES THAT SQUINT.

Harmless in Babyhood, but a Serious Matter Later On.

The eyes are meant to look both in the same direction and thus to help each other to see, as the feet help each other to walk or run. When they do not do so there is a squint or a "cast" in one or both eyes, or, to use the medical term, "strabismus." Not only disfigurement, but also impaired vision, results.

Little babies squint more or less during the first few months of life. That is not a serious matter, although it often frightens a young and inexperienced mother. It is generally caused by a slight disturbance of the digestion and passes when that is corrected. But a squint that appears later, when the child is beginning to develop vision by the constant use of the eye muscles, must not be neglected. If it is the unfortunate condition will probably last through life.

The eyes should work absolutely in unison, just as two horses harnessed to a cart ought to pull together. When they do not focus on the same point at the same time the crooked eye soon abandons the struggle and leaves the straight eye to do all the work. That is unfair to the good eye and fatal to the other, for an eye that is not used grows gradually blind from lack of exercise. Even if the squint is so slight that the child makes an unconscious effort to force the affected eye to its task he is sure to suffer the distressing ache of eye strain.

When a young child has strabismus take him at once to a trustworthy oculist, in order that he may have the glasses that his condition demands. And, when he has been fitted with glasses that pull the crooked eye into line with the straight eye and make it do its work properly, see that he wears them every waking minute, except when he washes his face.

If the squinting eye has already got the habit of shirking it may have to be trained by exercises. The good eye must be shut at intervals, so that the other will have to do all the work, but the oculist in charge of the case must decide the precise character and frequency of the treatment.—Youth's Companion.

THE ANTARCTIC CONTINENT.

It Was First Discovered by a Daring Yankee Sailor in 1821.

History presents from time to time some curious anomalies, and not the least among these is the story of the original discovery of the great continent surrounding the south pole, says Outing. A grim, inaccessible coast, guarded from man's approach by fields of impassable ice floes and bergs, it resisted all efforts of the ablest of early explorers to win its shores, only to be discovered at last by a boy of eighteen in command of a little forty-ton sloop.

Nathaniel Palmer was the lad's name, and he came of the best of old New England seafaring stock. After some preliminary training at sea, young Palmer sailed in 1812 or 1814 as second mate of a bark bound for the sealing grounds of the south Atlantic. After some weeks of fruitless exploration and terrific struggles with the wintry gales of the region about Cape Horn they came at last to the south Shetland islands and soon had filled the vessel's hold with a fortune in furs.

This voyage made such a stir in all the New England seaport towns on their return that before many years a second expedition was fitted out and Palmer, now Captain Nat, was given command of a little down east sloop called the Hero, which was sent along in consort with the larger vessels. This diminutive craft could hardly have been more than sixty feet in length, but she weathered successfully the rigors of wind and sea and arrived in due course at her destination.

At this time nothing was known of the existence of any land of continental extent within the antarctic circle—nor did Captain Nat much care whether there was such or not. What he was looking for was seals. So when he came upon a long stretch of coast line facing to the north in the vicinity of the sixtieth meridian west of Greenwich he examined the shore for possible rookeries and, finding nothing but ice and penguins, sailed away back again to the northward.

A few days after this the little Hero fell in with two tall ships of the Russian navy under Commander Bellingshausen. When young Palmer went on board for lunch at the commander's invitation and mentioned casually his discovery of land to the southward he must have been surprised, indeed, to learn that that which he in his little sloop had blundered upon unsought and had turned away from in disgust, these mighty ships of the czar of all the Russias had for two years been seeking in vain.

Commander Bellingshausen, to do him justice, gave young Palmer full credit for his discovery, and this—the first portion of the antarctic continent to be seen by man—is set down upon the maps today as Palmerland in enduring tribute to the daring of the Yankee sailor lad who first caught sight of it from the deck of a little sailboat in the year of grace 1821.

Getting Even With Justice.

The prisoner at the bar of the police court was sore over his treatment and could not conceal it wholly.

"If I should express my opinion of this court, your honor," he said, rising from his chair, "would you fine me for contempt?"

"I certainly should!" replied the judge decisively.

"Thank you," bowed the prisoner. "I wish to extend my congratulations to your honor and all those connected with the court for the very fair and impartial trial that I have received at your hands."

Then the prisoner sat down and the judge was flabbergasted.—Judge.

Good Evidence.

Katherine had been brought up to believe that talebearing was despicable, but there were times when her greedy twin strained her principles to the snapping point.

"Katherine," said her mother one day, "is it possible that you and Howard have eaten that whole bag of peppermints that I meant to take to grandmother, just because I left the bag on the table?"

"I didn't take one of them, mother," said Katherine indignantly, "but Howard—well, I shan't tell tales, but just you smell him!"—Youth's Companion.
