Hours of Sleep.

According to Dr. Frederick B. Percy of the Boston university school of medicine, the least cultured and least developed adults need the most sleep, and the higher the intellectual development the more prone one is to dreams. The healthy child of two years passes half its time in slumber. The adult requires from seven to eight hours of sleep daily, aged persons not more than five or six hours. Women need, as a rule, more sleep than men. There are persons to whom nine or even ten or twelve hours of sleep are essential, while others seldom sleep more than six out of the twenty-four. Too much sleep is possible. Sleep undisturbed is what we all desire.

Proved His Contention.

"Mother," complained Johnny, not so pleased as might have been with the results of unselfish maternal tailoring, "these trousers are too tight. They're tighter'n my own skin."
"Now, my son," said mother, in quiet reproof, "don't exaggerate. How can they be tighter than your skin?"
"They are, too, mother; they must be. I can sit down in my skin, but I can't sit down in these trousers."—Exchange.

LEGAL BACK NUMBERS.

Queer Customs That Survive in Spite of Their Uselessness.

The law has its little superstitions notwithstanding the prevalent conception of that science as cold, unemotional and severely logical.

For instance, what useful purpose is served by inserting in a bond, conditioned for the payment of the amount of the actual debt? Bonds have been thus drawn since the days of Lord Coke, and the printed forms in common use today contain the ancient penal clause. By the letter of such a bond the obligee is clearly entitled to recover the full penal sum on the obligor's default in paying the sum specified in the condition. But has the obligee, for these two or three hundred years, ever been allowed to recover more than the actual debt with interest and costs?

By another common practice deeds are made to recite that the grant is made "in consideration of the sum of one dollar, good and lawful money of the United States of America, to me in hand paid, the receipt whereof I hereby acknowledge," or some equivalent formula. The idea that a deed must express a consideration is ineradicable, and equally fixed appears to be the superstition that a consideration of one dollar is quite as effective as a consideration commensurate with the value of the estate granted. Lawyers learned in the law of real property know better, of course, but such is the popular notion. It is elementary that as between the parties a deed is perfectly valid without any consideration at all; otherwise there could be no such thing as a conveyance by way of a gift.

Why do we begin a will with an invocation to the Deity and a recital that the testator is "of sound mind and disposing memory?" Does the former aid the testator spiritually, and does the latter furnish any evidence of his testamentary capacity? And why do we so often insist on attaching a seal opposite the testator's signature? Our statutes do not require a will to be sealed, wherefore the seal is wholly superfluous, as the lawbooks have long advised us.

Many generations of lawyers learned in equity pleading have followed the ancient practice of concluding a bill of complaint with the solemn assurance, "And thus your orator will ever pray, etc." Apparently no modern lawyer knew what the decadent formula meant until recently a well known author ran the thing to its lair among the ancient rolls of the court of chancery and found that (before it lost its tail) it was a prayer for the health and longevity of the king!

These are only a few of the superstitions that have survived the days when the trial by battle and the criminality of witchcraft were finally eliminated from that law which is our proud heritage and which has been so fondly praised as "the perfection of human reason."—Bench and Bar.

Salt the Cows.

Cows should be salted regularly, winter and summer. Salt is an essential part of the ration even though it may not have much direct food value. Many farmers who otherwise are careful feeders neglect the salting of their stock, especially in winter. The best plan is to mix a certain percentage of salt in the grain feed when it is mixed. A pound and a half of salt per 100 pounds of grain is about right. The salt will make the grain more palatable, and one will not be so apt to neglect feeding any. It is a wise plan to keep a supply of salt where the cattle can reach it whenever they are loose.

DAIRY POINTERS.

A good way to salt the cow is to keep a plentiful supply before her and trust to her judgment in using what she needs.

The best profits in dairying come from the best farms and herd. It takes more than a good creamery to make a large milk check.

Feed is an important factor in making a cow profitable, but the best feed cannot avail unless good care is given also.

Does silage fed to the dairy cow taint the milk? No. But the odor of the silage if allowed to get into the milk in open pails will taint it.

A ration for a dairy cow should fulfill the following requirements: It should be balanced, palatable, home grown as near as possible, and finally it should be economical.

PASTURE FOR SWINE.

Important Points to Consider in the Hog Raising Business.

While clover is the very best pasture for pigs and hogs, I get good results by letting them run on mixed wild grass, writes a Minnesota hog grower in the Orange Judd Farmer. I like white clover and timothy pasture in the spring, then have ready a mixture of oats, barley and rape to turn them on the last of May and a rape lot for the latter part of July and August. It is also a good plan to have ready a small sweet corn field near at hand. I always sow rape when I cultivate corn the last time, and this makes a fine rape pasture. After the green corn is cut I open the gates and let the hogs clean up both the corn and rape. Pumpkins are a good feed for old hogs late in the fall.

One of the advantages Yorkshire breeds have over other types is that they can be marketed at almost any age. With good, liberal treatment they reach prime weights at six and seven months, weighing 145 to 200 pounds or better. They can be held a little longer and turned off at 225 to 250 pounds to advantage. If held a year they can be made to tip the scales at 400 pounds. With extra care they can be made to do better than that. There are many kinks in the hog business. One that I consider important is to know and like your hogs. If you like them and study them this kink will let you on to all the other kinks in time.

Select good stock and use only a pure bred boar of your favorite breed. Then treat this foundation herd well. Put them on pasture and give them plenty of pure water and provide comfortable sleeping quarters. Feed a variety of foods, but do not overfeed. Disinfect troughs and sleeping quarters and the pigs themselves either by sprinkling or dipping. Keep them free at all times from worms. Wood ashes, soot, sulphur and charcoal are good things to keep before the hogs. Do not keep too many hogs together. These things in my experience are the fundamentals of success in the hog business.
