

WOOLGROWERS WILL GATHER IN CONDON WEEK FROM MONDAY

It is reported that practically all of the wool growers of this county and Wheeler are planning to be in Condon a week from next Monday at which time the demonstration car showing all classes of market wools in all stages from the back of the animal to the back of mankind will be here. A number of sheep showing the different breeds and types for profitable wool production will be shown and this will be especially interesting to the sheepmen. Every wool grower should be acquainted with the market demands for wool and just why different wools command different prices and this is one purpose of this demonstration car which is operated by the U. S. Department of Agriculture and the O. A. C. Extension Service. Methods of improving the wool crop by breeding and proper management and methods of handling the clips to get the best price will be demonstrated. It is the first time such a chance has been offered to the wool growers of this section and they should take advantage of it.

Home Talent Show Pleases Large Crowd

The home talent show, "Comrades," presented in the American Theatre last Friday night was a success in every respect. The attendance was good, about $125 being received at the door and the audience was appreciative as it well had a right to be for it was one of the best shows ever seen in Condon. Every character was good and everyone present felt he had his money's worth.

CONDON TEAM FEELS THAT DECISION WAS SECURED UNFAIRLY

The Condon High School debating team, consisting of Herbert Welshons and Nell Goodwin defended the negative side of the state question against the Milton High School team, affirmative, in the chapel of Columbia College in Milton last Saturday night.

While the Milton team got a two to one decision, the Condon people present as well as others felt that however honest the two judges may have been the Condon team beat them thoroughly and decisively and should have had an unanimous decision.

The Condon High School team feels that small politics were employed for the selection of judges. The by-laws of the debating league provide for the mutual selection of judges by the principals of the contesting schools. The visiting principal is to send a list of names of people who will be agreeable to him as judges. The home principal is to pass on this list, accepting or rejecting, and then furnish the visiting principal with a list. This is to be kept up until the judges are selected. The Condon principal sent in his list of judges about the first of February. The Milton principal let the matter rest until the evening of February 8th, one day before the debate, making it impossible to reject his and select others before the time set for the debate. In this way he was able to select two of the judges himself and he selected them from the school where he and his faculty received their education. However fair these two judges may have been it was like the grandparent comparing the merits of the grandchild with a stranger. While we admit the judges were probably sincere in their decision, we also unhesitatingly say that the act of the Milton principal in employing such methods in selecting judges is more the act of a cheap politician than an educator and such methods should be held in contempt by all people who like clean interscholastic contests.
