the house. "I must ask you plainly to let things alone. And another thing, please, don't talk to the man at the wheel."

"Will you please mind your own business?" she almost screamed, and then, crying and laughing together, "If you paid as much attention to your work as you do to—me men wouldn't fall from aloft on account of rotten foot ropes."

The abashed officer went forward, grumbling about "discipline" and "women aboard ship." When he was well out of sight in the darkness the girl turned suddenly, passed both arms around Owen's neck, exerted a very slight pressure, patted him playfully on the shoulder as she withdrew them and sped down the companionway.

He steered a wild course during that trick and well deserved the profane criticism which he received from the mate.

The next Morgan Robertson story will be "The Last Battleship."

MORGAN ROBERTSON.

The Amazing Story of a Literary Genius.

Morgan Robertson was more than a genius of American literature. He was the psychic mystery of his time. An unlettered sailor, he grinned at the grammarians and wrote "Sinful Peck," a marvel of precise English and imitable style; awed by the subtleties of long division, he nevertheless smiled at the savants, solved problems in a few weeks with which they had struggled valiantly for years and invented his improved periscope for submarines.

Fourteen years before the icy waters of the north Atlantic closed over the steel ripped, dying Titanic Morgan Robertson in his story, "The Wreck of the Titan," written in 1898, prophesied the greatest of ocean disasters with incanny, almost unbelievable faithfulness. When originally offered to a big magazine the story was refused as improbable.

A few years ago statesmen laughed at the thought of a world war. Ten years ago Morgan Robertson was writing vivid, dramatic stories of sea battles that parallel with astonishing accuracy the conflicts that are meagerly described to us today.

This great writer had seen the potential possibilities of death and destruction in those undersea horrors we know today as submarines.

He prophesied, then the great floating forts as represented today by our dreadnaughts, and he painted with master strokes the startling picture of the dread Whitehead torpedo on its mission of destruction.

Word has been received by Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Brown, who live north of Condon, that their son, Newton, has arrived safely in France. The message was a printed card and was received Monday evening.

Edward Dunn came up from Portland Tuesday.

D. H. Cottmire purchased a new Buick from L. E. Shelley last week.

F. T. Hurlburt is driving a new Buick Four purchased last week from L. E. Shelley.

Mrs. Fred Anderson left Tuesday for Mitchell.

"GLOBE ADS PAY," SAYS USER

Claud Clark says: "It pays, all right." He lost his saddle horse about a month ago and since that time has ridden about 200 miles looking for him. Last week he put a five line ad in the Globe Want Ad column and this 25c ad found his horse about four miles from town. Globe advertising does pay.

Henry Wilkins was up from Clem a day or two this week. He says he tried to hire a man the first of the week to help him drive stock and could get no one to help him.

A. Greiner wants the Globe for another year and renewed Saturday.

F. C. Greiner and family drove to The Dalles Sunday in their car.

Have you made your income tax return?

W. C. Brown went to Portland Thursday. He drove his car to The Dalles.

The Congregational Ladies Aid met yesterday afternoon at the church with twenty members present. A very enjoyable time is reported. The hostesses were Mesdames Cathey, Scribner and Bennett. The Aid will meet again one week from next Thursday.

W. E. Smith drove his car to The Dalles yesterday afternoon and took the train to Portland.

Mrs. E. H. Randall was up from Clem Tuesday.

Mrs. M. J. Lynch of Gwendolen transacted business in Condon Tuesday.

George Allen was over from Mayville Tuesday.

W. G. Keys of Mayville was a Condon visitor Tuesday.

C. A. Damaree, who recently came to Condon from Portland to work for Ross Kennedy, has bought out Mr. Kennedy and is now running the business alone. Mr. Damaree comes highly recommended as a first-class tailor.

Do your summer-fallowing early and do it with an Oliver Chilled Plow. Get the plow at The S. B. Berker Co.

Hubert Magee went to Portland yesterday.

A. B. Robertson is a Buick booster now. He got one last week.

C. A. Damaree—successor to Ross Kennedy. 1d2
