THE LAST BATTLESHIP

ror, he closed his eyes, changed his position and opened them on the plac-id sea on the other side, away from the Argyll.

Far over a movement on the surface caught his eye. It was a triangular arrangen ont of ripples such as is made by the cutwater of a boat moving slowly. The apex of the triangle pointed toward the Argyll, and it was coming toward ber. As it drew near Felton made out the cause, a short length of pole extending about three feet out of water.

"There's a submarine for you, captainF he called grimly. "See the peri-

"Where?' yolled the captain excitedly. "Where is it?"

He sprang to his feet. "Oh, God belp us!" cried the captain mournfully as he saw the tube and the shape beneath. "Jump-jump for your lives! Jump, you!"

He pointed at Felton and sprang to-

"Why should I jump?" asked Felton wonderingly and prepared for defense. The others came at him, each shouting his loudest: "Jump, jump for your life! Overboard with you! Quick, you

Then one sprang to the rall, poised a moment and threw himself out into space. Another followed and another. "Jump, will you?" yelled the captain, gesticulating earnestly. "I'm in command. I must be last to go. Over with you! Over with you all."

They were crowding to the rail. where one after another the rest of the rew took the leap. With no further thought about the matter, Felton reached the rail and, without looking down, drew a deep breath and leaped, a victim of suggestion.

Three hundred feet is a long jump. He turned over twice in that terrible descent, and once, looking upward, he saw the sprawling form of the captain and above it the quiescent airship.

With consciousness nearly gone he struck the water feet first and was almost split in two by the impact, but the cold shock brought back his lapsing senses, and he found himself feebly swimming, in which direction he could not tell, for it was pitch dark. Suddenly a light appeared. It was not a dim glow like diffused sunlight, but a spark, a point of yellow, that grew larger and became a disk. It was approaching, and now another appeared beside it, fainter and crescent shaped On the other side appeared a third, and, dazed with physical agony that reached from lungs to brain, he recognized the dead lights of a submadine's conning tower. He looked for the hull beneath and saw it, a dark blur that was growing in size.

It came swiftly at him, and just as he was reaching out to ward himself from the pointed nose there was a coughing thud, and something brushed by him in a blast of bubbles and went on. Then, with many sharp knocks on head, ribs and knuckles, he was sucked with the inrush of water squarely into the open tube that had just discharged its torpedo. He heard a clang behind him, the shutting of the forward tube door, then a whistling sound.

The pressure had nearly burst his ear drums before the tube was emp tled of water, and the inner door was opened. With a gasping call for help he crawled and hitched along the tube. and men reached in to him. They pulled him out into the lighted han dling room, where, too weak to stand. he fell to the floor, breathing in deep. convulsive gasps.

A man brought a bottle, lifted his d and poured of some stimulant down his throat Felton had just strength to swallow and it warmed and aroused him. He eat up and, being a torpedo expert, had little difficulty in assimilating his first impressions.

The craft resembled the conventional submarine that he knew. But there was this difference that he noted when able to turn his head: The boat was stiffened with upright stanchlons of about the size and length of the stanchions in the airship and placed in about the same position along the Another similarity struck him at his first glance around, and he wondered why he had not remarked it in the airship—the air flasks, trimming tanks and spare torpedoes arranged along the sides occupied the same relative positions as did the steel cylinders in the other, while the steering gear of both was amidships and the motive power aft.

What have you caught this time. Bill?" called a voice from the wheel, a strangely familiar voice.

"Dunno," answered the man with the fask. "It's a sheep, I think, or maybe a dog, but it looks something like a horse. Have another drink and tell us what you are.' Felton did not refuse a second draft.

It brought him to his feet. "I'm a man," he answered, with spir-

To The American People

There is no foundation for the alleged violations of law attributed to our Company by agents of the Federal Trade Commission and I want to say emphatically that Swift & Company is not a party to any conspiracy to defraud the Government. Nor has Swift & Company been. guilty of improperly storing foods or of making false entries or reports.

Conferences of packers, where prices have been discussed, have been held at the urgent request and in the presence of representatives of either the Food Administration or the Council of National Defense. And yet the packers have been accused of committing a felony by acting in collusion on Government bids!

We have done our best, with other packers, large and small, to comply with the directions of the United States Food Administration in all particulars, including the furnishing of food supplies for the U.S. Army and Navy and the Allies, now being handled through the Food Administration.

We will continue to do our utmost,under Government direction, to increase our production and assist the Food Administration. We consider that the opportunity to co-operate whole-heartedly and to our fullest powers with this branch of the Government is our plain and most pressing duty.

The Trade Commission Attorney has, by false inference and misplaced emphasis, given to disconnected portions of the correspondence taken from our private files and read into the Record, a false and sinister meaning with the plain purpose of creating antagonistic public opinion.

The services of the packers of the United States are most urgently needed, and I regret exceedingly that we should at this time have to spend our efforts in defending ourselves against unfounded, unproved, and unfair assertions such as are being daily made public.
