

Sea life rescuers expect to see more turtles beached

Live turtles are normally taken to the Oregon Coast Aquarium in Newport, but aquarium is already rehabilitating one found in Pacific City earlier this month.

If a turtle survives, it is released in Southern California waters, often after hitching a ride with an agency such as the U.S. Coast Guard during a training trip.

Unfortunately, the chances for survival at this stage are slim, Chandler noted, with a 75 to 90 percent mortality rate. The turtles become hypothermic in colder waters and are often tossed around in the surf.

Todd said Cannon Beach's turtle was at 50 degrees when it arrived in Seattle. The turtle's normal temperature is in the low 70s.

"The odds are against them," Chandler said.

But the faster the turnaround, the better the chances, Todd said.

Sea life rescuers expect to see more turtles beached along the coast with this year's El Niño. "Usually when we get one, we get a few," Boothe said.

Todd said the turtles normally remain south of San Diego. However, she added, they do sometimes travel farther north in warm currents searching for food. It's not unusual to see a turtle beached in Oregon per year.
