The boxes contained an array of items, depending on the household size. Among the items were whole turkeys, vegetables, apples, canned goods, dried ramen noodles, croutons for stuffing and more. The packages contained a special treat from Bruce's Candy Kitchen, as well. Children also received presents wrapped earlier in the week by members of the American Legion Auxiliary. About 60 households — or approximately 250 people — received boxes this year. The number fluctuates by about 10 to 15 each season. Some of the area's hospitality workers leave temporarily during the winter, or Boehm suspects the need would be greater, "well over 300 people," he said. Some of the items — particularly the toys — are donated and everything else is purchased with money from the legion post's charitable account, which relies on donations and grants. It costs between $4,200 and $4,400 to fill the baskets, said Boehm, who does the shopping. He spends about 40 hours putting together the program, but he's been doing it so long it is like "second nature," he said. Pulling off the program relies on "the grace and help from the volunteers," he said. "It's a community effort," O'Reilly said. Area residents Jim and Heidi Lent have volunteered for about five or six years. Heidi Lent, a member of the auxiliary, said they started in part to get their children involved in helping with a community service project. "I think that's a good thing to teach," she said. Although it's a simple concept, the volunteers agreed there is something meaningful about helping out others in the community. "You know they need it," Heidi Lent said of the recipients. "You can see it on their faces — they just need it."
