Flair dedicates shop, provides donation

Flair shop owner Jay Shepard and manager Linda Saucedo hosted an event to celebrate the store's official dedication Monday night. The evening had a dual purpose, with the presentation of a $3,000 check to the North Coast Land Conservancy. The funds will be used to support the conservancy's programs and initiatives, including the Coastal Edge and Boneyard Ridge acquisition.

"We were looking for a partner as part of our give back program and donate a portion of our revenue to a charitable organization we felt really strongly about, stable and worked in the local area," Shepard said. "We're going to support the future of the Oregon coast in perpetuity. Every stream starts with a small drop, we hope the small amount we can do will help at least to spread the word, it's big for us being a little store."

Anticipating impact of climate change

Join climatologist John Stevenson as he kicks off the 2016 season of Listening to the Land presentations, focused on the theme of water. "Climate Change and the Coast" begins at 6 pm on Wednesday, Jan. 20, at the Seaside Public Library. Admission is free. Refreshments will be served.

A warming climate is already affecting life in Oregon, according to Stevenson. Higher seas will mean changes to the shoreline and damage to coastal structures. The impacts are being felt upstream too, in the watersheds that support our fisheries, and across the mountains where most Oregonians live.

Stevenson is a regional extension climate specialist with Oregon Sea Grant and the Climate Impacts Research Consortium, where he facilitates community adaptation to climate-driven changes in coastal hazards, water resources, and forest disturbance. Previously he worked with Portland-based Ecotrust to map critical fishing grounds off the Oregon Coast in a process to site renewable ocean energy. Before moving to Oregon, Stevenson worked on fisheries and ocean planning issues for NOAA in Silver Springs, Maryland. He has a master's degree in marine resource management from Oregon State University.

Listening to the Land is a monthly winter speaker series offered January through May and presented by North Coast Land Conservancy and the Necanicum Watershed Council in partnership with the Seaside Public Library. Learn more at NCLCtrust.org.
