

Students learn about puffins, sea life

LYRA FONTAINE/CANNON BEACH GAZETTE

HRAP education coordinator Lisa Habecker teaches students about hermit crabs, sea slugs and more at the "aquarium investigation station."

For a snack break, students made their own "tufted puffin muffins."

Protective parents

Each puffin burrows two to six feet deep into the rock and lays just one egg, Holtman said.

Displaying different bird eggs at the "bird observation station," Holtman had the kindergartners guess the one that came from a puffin. While the other two eggs were speckled and colored blue or pink, the puffin egg was white.

"There's always a parent that's standing guard at the entrance to the burrow, which is why it's able to be bright white like that," Holtman said. "With the combination of being deep in the rock and the parent guarding the nest, the egg is highly protected. That's why it doesn't need a lot of camouflage."

In contrast, the black oystercatcher egg has dark speckles for camouflage because it is laid exposed on rocks or cliff.

Puffin parents attempting to return to their burrows might get into little tiffs with predators, which include gulls, murre and eagles.

The tufted puffins usually mate on the open ocean before coming to the rock.

"The babies should be born in about 30 to 40 days," Keyser said. "But if the nest is not successful, they'll always try again. They could hatch towards the end of summer."

Volunteers sought for trail clean-up day at Circle Creek

North Coast Land Conservancy has a growing trail system at its Circle Creek Habitat Reserve, at the south end of Seaside. The conservancy is seeking volunteers to join them Saturday, April 23, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. to help get trails ready for the spring and summer hiking season.

In addition to the short Legacy Loop nature trail, the conservancy is developing a longer Circle Creek and wetlands walk that includes a long stretch of boardwalk. Volunteers will brush out and mulch the nature trail and portions of the wetlands walk and repairing or replacing footbridges and anything else disturbed by winter flooding. Volunteers from Northwest Coast Trails Coalition are partnering with the land conservancy on the trails clean-up day.
