

'Life in the River' at Seaside Library

For nearly 20 years, the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife has been closely monitoring the survival and downstream migration of salmon in coastal river basins. As the assistant project leader of the Salmonid Life Cycle Monitoring Project, Derek Wiley has spent the past decade researching salmon and steelhead and making estimates about their abundance and survival rates on the northern Oregon coast, often taking his GoPro camera into the field with him to capture fish behavior and spawning. On Wednesday, Feb. 15, join Wiley at the Seaside Public Library for the second of this year's Listening to the Land presentations focused on wildlife. Admission to "Life in the River" is free.

Wiley will provide a special screening of his films documenting the freshwater life of native salmon in our region. Journey's End is an 18-minute video capturing underwater behavior and spawning of wild chum salmon, Chinook salmon, coho salmon, and Pacific lamprey in several rivers and creeks on the northern Oregon Coast. He will also share footage documenting Salmonid Life Cycle Monitoring Project activities on the North Fork Nehalem River from fall 2015 and give us an update on more recent monitoring results.

As a research biologist with ODFW, Wiley supervises a field crew responsible for monitoring abundance of adult and juvenile salmonids in the North Fork Nehalem River for the Salmonid Life Cycle Monitoring Project. He earned a bachelor's degree in biology from Towson State University and a master's degree in fisheries and wildlife from Frostburg State University, both in Maryland.

In 2004 he moved to John Day, Oregon, to work for ODFW on a steelhead research project. Two years later he moved to Tillamook to take his current position. Derek is an avid fly fisherman, photographer, and videographer.

State's poet laureate comes to CB

Oregon's poet laureate, Elizabeth Woody, will give a free reading in Cannon Beach, Friday, Feb. 17, at 7 p.m. at Tolovana Hall.

Besides reading, Woody will dive into her process, provide context and background on her poems, and also hold a question and answer session. As such, aspiring writers are especially encouraged to attend.

Woody got her start in academia. She studied at the Institute of American Indian Arts, Evergreen College and Portland State University. Over the course of her two-year term she hopes to visit the more far flung pockets of the state, bypassing populations centers like Portland that she feels are well served by the arts. In the early 2000s, Woody was part of the group that revived the state's poet laureate position, which had laid dormant for decades.

The reading is free. Tolovana Hall, 3779 Hemlock St., Cannon Beach. For more information visit tolovanaartscolony.org, email tolovanaartscolony@gmail.com or call 541-215-4445.

Barbara Drake to speak at authors series

The Northwest Authors Series continues at the Cannon Beach Library on Feb. 11 with Barbara Drake, author of "Morning Light," describing life in western Oregon's Yamhill Valley and lessons learned from her long sting of country living.

On March 11, Ellen Urbani, a former mental health specialist for the U.S. Department of Homeland Security joins the program. Her book "Landfall" is a nuanced fictional interpretation of historic events around Hurricane Katrina. Urbani has also written "When I was Elena," documenting her life in Guatemala during the final years of that country's civil war.

Portland mystery writer Warren Easley, author of the Cal Claxton Mysteries: "Matters of Doubt," "Dead Float" and "Never Look Down," will be the April 8 speaker.

The series concludes May 13 with Mindy Hardwick, author of "Sweetheart Wedding." Though Hardwick mainly focuses on teen and tween books, she also writes sweet contemporary romance books; she facilitates poetry workshops for teens at the Denny Youth Juvenile Justice Center and is the co-author of four anthologies of their writing.

The Northwest Authors series takes place the second Saturday of each month from October to May except December and is free to the general public. All library events are free and open to the public. Cannon Beach Library is located at 131 N. Hemlock St.; 503-436-1391, or at www.cannonbeachlibrary.org.
