Third-graders from Cannon Beach Academy got a taste of state politics with a trip to Salem on Monday, March 18, to visit with local legislators.

“We wanted to get the children involved in advocating for their own education,” academy director Amy Fredrickson said.

The charter school partnered with the Oregon Coalition of Community Charter Schools for the trip, and participated with nearly 20 other schools and dozens of students, board member Kelly Dewey said during the academy’s regular board of director meeting March 14.

Leading up to the trip, the academy’s third-graders drafted letters to their representatives — including State House Rep. Tiffany Mitchell, of District 32, and state Sen. Betsy Johnson, representing District 16 — defining issues affecting charter schools and offering solutions. The in-person meetings at the state capitol were also to talk about “the lack of equal access that charter schools are met with,” Fredrickson said.

For example, she said, charter schools don’t have access to the state’s School Improvement Fund.

“We spoke to our legislators about how vital that funding would be to our school in terms of improving the current building and when opening a new school in the long term,” Fredrickson said. “We also advocated for eliminating the proposed budget cuts, which will additionally impact our school, as well.”

Help knock out knotweed on the Necanicum River

Cannon Beach Gazette

North Coast Land Conservancy is seeking volunteers for one more assault on invasive Japanese knotweed that had spread widely in its Necanicum Forest Habitat Reserve east of Seaside. Join them for this stewardship day Wednesday, April 17, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Knotweed is a robust weed, native to Eurasia, that has invaded riverside forests on Oregon’s North Coast. It was widely planted in logging camps and along headwater streams in the 1900s. Floods transported root masses downstream, creating huge infestations on many Oregon rivers, including the Necanicum. NCLC has been working to rid Necanicum Forest Habitat Reserve of knotweed for several years. One more big push by volunteers will help NCLC get a handle on this invader.
