THE GAMBLER AND VICE.

The mayor of a certain Michigan town issued an order to prohibit gambling. Then came the circulation of a petition protesting against the suppression of gambling and games of chance because "it would damage business."

By what manner of reasoning any merchant figures it out that gambling helps business, is a conundrum. The gambler is a producer of no business. He creates nothing for the community, but lies in wait for easy marks that they may be bled. Gamblers live off the industry of other people. They rob the home of money that should go toward the necessities of life. They strip the child of shoes and clothing. They are warts upon the escutcheon of the body politic.

When crusades were started for the suppression of the vice evil, there was a hue and cry that it "would hurt business."

From the viewpoint of some, morality and decency and virtue can go the dogs, so long as "business is not hurt."

The city which has no gambling and no dens of iniquity is the city that is on a sound foundation. Money which would vanish in riotous living, finds its way into legitimate channels of trade. The home benefits. The merchant benefits. The community benefits.

Gambling and vice never made any city.

That Michigan town should throw those petitions into the scrap heap, and support the mayor in all his efforts to make the place a better town in which live.

GOOD OLD BIBLE LINE

This is a good old Bible
That we have got for a guide,
It points the way to glory
On the good old Bible line.
No divisions is there in it,
They are one in God.
They must teach the same Jesus
On the good old Bible line.

Chorus

Good old Bible line, good old Bible line,
My ticket it is purchased on the good old Bible line.

They must not have a carnal mind
On this good old Bible line.
They must give up all hatred,
Variance, strife, sedition too
If they ever get to heaven
On this good old Bible line.

King Jesus is our captain.
He gave his life for all
If we ever get to heaven
We must take the good old Bible line
Salvation is our ticket
It was purchased by his own blood
And we must come by repentance
On this good old Bible line.
