Alec Imlah returned home Saturday evening from near Drain, where he had been to look at a ranch that he thought of trading for. He was accompanied home by his son, James, also Frank Luce and Ab Meyers, of Salem.

Of all the cranks the crankiest is the chronic pessimist, says an exchange. He is always whining like a half starved dog with a tin can tied to his tail. When the sky is beautifully clear, he is positively certain that everything will dry up and there will be a scarcity. When the gentle rain begins to fall he laments and is afraid the crops will be spoiled. He is always expecting some great calamity, misfortune of some kind or of being laid up with rheumatism. No matter how rosy the apples look, or how juicy the pears, he is afraid that they are wormy at the core and can't be kept until Christmas. The country is going to the bow wows and everybody is a dirty and dishonest rascal. His own peaceful and progressive town is all right, but he is convinced that it never will improve so very much. The high church spire is a notable landmark, but it might fall down some day and do great damage. He himself enjoys excellent health at present, but he is sure that he won't live long—and he shouldn't. The world would be much happier without such cranky pessimists.
