A New Thing in Silos.

A party consisting of L. M. Kraner and wife, D. T. Werschkuhl and wife and the editor and his wife and Arba Stiverson took in the State Fair at Salem last Friday and enjoyed a splendid auto trip, returning by way of McMinnville. While visiting the fair our attention was directed to a new thing in silo building. It is a patent owned by W. H. Monroe and as the people of Tillamook county are becoming more and more convinced that the silo is almost a necessity on the farm we took the pains to thoroughly investigate this new silo.

The silo is made entirely of Oregon fir wood tongued and grooved, and laid horizontally, the ends being interlocked or dove-tailed in such a manner that makes warping next to impossible. When dry the weights of the material keeps the silo air tight, and when wet the natural expansion meets no resistance whatever, so that wet or dry it is perfect.

This silo is put up without nails or bands and in consequence is a much cheaper constructed and in appearance looks as well if not better than the old style silo.

Our High School Credits Acceptable.

To those people in the south end of the county who are interested in the Cloverdale High School this letter from Frank Owen will be of interest. Frank is in the Washington High School at Portland. He finished two years of work at Cloverdale and would have completed his English course here in two years.

Those who are afraid the Cloverdale credits will not be accepted by other schools need have no fear. Come to the Cloverdale High School and we will help you—that is what we are here for.

Following is the letter referred to:

Portland, Ore., Oct. 2, 1916.

Dear Mr. Bidgood:
I suppose you will be glad to hear that they accepted all of my credits at Washington High. I got credit for three term's work in American History and Civics. I'm taking college preparatory course. It will take me about three years to finish unless I take two terms of Latin in one. Mr. Herdman said I could start taking second term Latin but I told him I didn't know enough about the first term. I started to take first and second term together but it mixed me all up so I quit and am taking Ancient History now. I got a bum start in mathematics. They use a different book here and had covered all about circles, but I guess I'll come out all right. In English we use Long's Literature but are just starting in. English is no snap here, believe me. Next term I'll have to drop history and start taking Spanish (I could take German or French) as in my course if I only take three years of Latin I must take two years of some other language. If I had wanted to take the English course I could have finished in two years. I ought to be studying now but I don't hurt myself any along that line. As far as the knowledge is concerned I think I could absorb as much at school there as I do here because you get more individual attention. Here in my English class there are about twice as many as there were in the whole Cloverdale High School. I guess that's about all of the details. If any of the kids are
