THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1916

The innocent consumer in the United States is paying for the prosperity for those who are benefitting from the high prices caused by the war in Europe. If it takes two bushels of wheat to keep American stomachs filled and one of them is sent abroad, the American stomach surely cannot get its normal ration.

Republican editors all over the country are bemoaning the fact that Hughes was not elected president. We feel that we have a real grievance over the matter. Just before election John Umphlette came into our office and invited us to eat goose with him on Thanksgiving-day and turkey on Christmas. Of course we hastened to accept the invitation, and in our heart thought John was one of the most magnanimous fellows in the community. Think of our disappointment when he again paid us a visit and informed us that the invitations were cancelled. Upon being pressed for an explanation, after swearing us to secrecy he told us that when he issued the invitation he already had the turkey and that he bet it against a goose that belonged to Miss Clara McKee on the result of the election. Now Miss McKee has both the turkey and the goose. We are willing to leave it to anybody that we have a real grievance. —Amity Standard.
