THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1917.

Harry Thaw's wound is said to be healing very slowly. But it would be just like him to get well.

Yamhill county is figuring on a $500,000 road bond issue. Yamhillers say you cannot keep the old county down. It was the first in Oregon to build good roads; its roads have been kept up as well as any in Oregon, excepting Multnomah; and now to secure for itself the benefits of through travel it is figuring on further improvement. Something good will come from the road agitation in Yamhill, for the county contains the finest farming country on earth, and first class roads through it is what will sell farm lands and settle up the county with thrifty, enterprising new farmers.

What is said of Yamhill county regarding the benefits to be derived from road improvement can truthfully be said for Tillamook county.

AN OUTRAGEOUS PROPOSITION.

So far the Oregon legislature has shown no disposition to injure any Oregon industries by radical or freak legislation. A bill has been introduced, however, attacking the fish industry on the Rogue river. The motive behind this bill seems to be the whim of a few "sportsmen" who wish commercial fishing killed on the Rogue river to insure them better sport a few days in the year.

We will make no attempt to argue the merits of injuring a great industry for the benefit of a few rod and gun clubs and so-called "sports." The motive alone is enough to kill it.

Oregon has had enough freak legislation and this move is so preposterous that it should be given a sea, at head.

To hamper or kill an Oregon industry that employs hundreds of workmen for the benefit of a few "sports" would be a black spot in the state's history.

COUNTRY PAPERS.

Busy Portland men usually confine their newspaper reading to the big city dailies, and forget that out in the state there are published sterling, independent journals which are powerful factors in promoting, sound, wholesome public sentiment.

While not so brilliant in editorial expression as the city dailies which employ writers to comment on the issues of the hour, the country papers are edited by the men who own them, and hence reflect a practical, common sense point of view.

To keep in touch with the real sentiment of a citizenship that has the independence and ability to maintain itself in the open country, instead of drifting to the congestion of the metropolis, every Portland business man ought to subscribe for a few country weeklies or small community dailies.

And to make his wares known to that same independent and sturdy citizenship, he ought to include the country papers as well as the city dailies in his advertising plans.—Oregon Voter.

THE SLAB CREEK SAGE SAYS

It is easier to renew a good resolution than a ninety-day note.

The bee is never too busy to administer a stinging rebuke.

If matrimony doesn't make a woman wise there isn't any hope for her.

One of the things a man can't understand is why his enemies seem to have so many friends.

Occasionally a married man does a lot of talking when he is away from home because that is the only chance he gets.

Never condemn a man's foolish actions until you are wise to his game.

Men are born, but husbands are made.

Some people are so unimportant that they don't even furnish material for gossip.

Ever notice how easy it is for a man to be good natured when everything is coming his way?

And many a man has been caught at his own fool game by wise people who let him think he was fooling them.

Eve never left poor old Adam at home to take care of the children while she went about the country preaching women's rights. But then what woman wants to be an Eve.

The less said about the age of women and canned goods the better.

Happiness has a peculiar way of coming and going without any warning.

It's wonderful what good memories people develop after having done you a favor.

Any man may be justified in blowing his own horn, but not in going on a "toot."

The girl who is wise never gives a young man a lock of her hair. She may decide to change the color of it later.
