Preaching Sunday Evening. The following letter is self explanatory:

Portland, Ore. Dec. 15, 1917.
Mr. W. A. High,
Cloverdale, Oregon.

My Dear Mr. High:
Rev. W. Lee Gray, of this city, has consented to go to Tillamook and Cloverdale for Sunday, December 23rd. He is one of our finest young men with a splendid wife and two little children.

I believe if you folks can show Mr. Gray that you have a field with possibilities in it, he might be induced to become your pastor. He is a thoroughly good man and I can recommend him unqualifiedly.

Please give his coming due announcement, so that all the folks may be out to hear him.

Yours very cordially,
Andrew J. Montgomery.

Join the Red Cross.

The American Red Cross is offering everyone, rich and poor alike, a chance to contribute personally to the Christmas spirit of the enlightened world. At such an anomalous season—when there is not peace on earth, when good will toward man is mocked by death-dealing caunon and blood-stained steel—what could be more blessed than to comfort and cheer the suffering thousands of Liberty defenders in the hospitals behind the battle lines?

To relieve the suffering of the wounded and to salvage battered human wrecks is the primary function of the Red Cross. Let us not forget that very soon our own boys in large numbers will be carried in Red Cross ambulances to Red Cross hospitals, there to receive every care scientific Red Cross methods afford.

Where a few millions will start for "over there," many more millions must remain at home. To these latter the Red Cross, in its drive for 10,000,000 new members between December 16 and December 25, offers the best form of stay-at-home service—membership in and co-operation with the Red Cross. It urges that you join the Red Cross, and then influence others to join by displaying from your home, your office, your store, or your factory the Red Cross service flag which bears one small red cross for each member where the flag is displayed.

Isn't it worth a dollar to you to know that you are privileged to fly the service flag and that you are helping—even in a small way—to lessen the agony of the boys in the trenches?
