Loganberries Make Good Flavoring and Beverage

Oregon Agricultural College, Corvallis—Loganberries, that are now being handled by many Oregon growers, have been found by the Department of Food and Home Economics office to be among the most excellent juices for beverages. By use of the fruit as a base in making beverages and fruit juices, it is found that 40 pounds of juice may be made from 25 pounds of berries. The juice is used in a manner similar to the preparation of other juices and is often served as a fruit juice syrup.
