Horse Goes Mad.

On Tuesday morning one of the horses at Cooper's barn went mad from some unknown cause and created a great deal of excitement by its actions. The animal would bite itself severely and although it made several attempts to attack men, paid no attention whatsoever to other horses.

The horse's jaws seemed to lock on several occasions, froth streamed from its mouth, and it showed many symptoms of hydrophobia. It was finally shot to end its sufferings and the carcass burned.

No one here knew of the horse ever having been bitten by a dog but as the animal and its mate were brought over from Pine Valley but recently, it may have been infected over there.
