--- This paper has enlisted with the government in the cause of America for the period of the war ---

Stamp out Prussianism with a War Savings Stamp.

What good will your wealth do you, should the Germans win the war?

Germans, their agents and sympathizers, are trying to overhear you. Keep quiet! Don't talk!

Spot the spy! Spies feed on little crumbs of conversation, little glances of observation. Starve them out.

"Sit tight, Americans, it is a part of the German propaganda to make you dissatisfied and disloyal."—Memphis Appeal.

Plant Thrift Stamps in your war garden and watch them grow into War Savings Stamps. When harvest days come after the war you'll reap a crop of dollars.

Federal officials have deemed it inadvisable to try to make use of the booze confiscated from boot leggers, as same contains but an average of five per cent alcohol. The "drunk" comes from drugs used in the concoction.

In these days of high prices and small profits, when the editor is called upon daily to contribute time, space and cash to one or another of the many movements that tend toward humanity and hastening the end of the war; when both spirit and cash are at low ebb; when it seems that our efforts are for naught;—we have but to think of the hundreds of thousands of our brave boys who are in France offering up their lives that the world may enjoy democracy; we become optimistic, and our work seems indeed light.

Money to Loan on Real Estate. Five to Eight Hundred Dollars at Eight per cent per annum. Inquire at this office.—ad18tf

USED STRING TO STIR ANGER

Twine Swung in Air, London Cabman Explained Indicated Other Cabby's Brother Was Hanged.

The conversation turned on the wonderful pungency and power of invective of the old-time London cabby as narrated by Charles Dickens in "Pickwick Papers" and by other authors of that and a subsequent time.

"A few years ago," said Dr. John H. Oliver, in the Indianapolis News, "I paid my second visit to London. The cabby and his horse had passed away. The horse-drawn omnibus was no more, the petrol-driven bus having taken its place. I told a Briton whom I met over there that I liked to sit on the outside next the driver, that I found him a most interesting character.

"So do I," said my British acquaintance, "but he is not at all as interesting as his predecessor of the old fashion. I was seated beside one of these old-time drivers going through a street crowded with vehicles when a bus coming from the opposite direction was in collision with our bus. The wheels of the two locked and then the highly ornate invective between the two drivers began. It was the perfect flower, yes, the full fruitage I thought of profanity and abuse.

"But I was mistaken. There was more and worse to come. When the wheels had become unlocked, my friend, the driver, drew from his pocket a bit of string and holding it above his head swung it slowly to and fro.

"The other driver at once jumped down from his bus and, whip in hand, struck at the string-shaker. The wealth of epithet he then used showed that all that had preceded it was as mild and kindly as the softest baby chatter. Our driver answered not a word, but as he drove slowly on continued the string shaking.

"I wondered what there could be in this simple bit of dumb-show to make the other busman so frantically angry. Then my driver gave the explanation: 'E didn't like it, did 'e? It was honky a bit of joke, don't 'e see. 'Is brother was 'anged last Friday.'"

Church Gives Every Man.

There is a little French church in the heart of Philadelphia which has given and given to the great world strife, ever since the war began, life blood and widows' mites, and in the face of poverty is still giving, giving, according to a Philadelphia correspondent.

Not one man between seventeen and fifty years old remains in the membership of the little church of St. Sauveur. All are at the front, some are with the French army, some are with the United States forces, but all have gone. All are fighting for the same great world ideal.

They have left mothers, wives and little ones who do not complain, but give to the last penny, not only for those they love, but for the relief of all suffering.

Nearly all of them are working people, but, in addition to the struggle for bread and butter, they have found the way to adopt and support four orphans in France. In addition to the incessant knitting and sewing for the little war orphans here these brave women have also found time to make and send countless woolen comforts and relief supplies to the war victims in France and Belgium, the orphans and the wounded. They also subscribed to the starving Armenians.

War Curbs Suicide.

Sir Bernard Mallet, registrar general of the British empire, announced recently that suicide had fallen off strikingly in England since the beginning of the war. The explanation is that the national unity of feeling, the subordination of self and the sharing of sympathy on all sides makes the individual's personal injuries less important and induces him to forget his own desperation. Personal indulgences and excesses of immorality, causes of insanity and melancholia, are curbed and minimized naturally by the economies enforced upon the populace. Discipline in eating, dressing, working has also a beneficial effect in keeping the mind sane and free from morbid broodings.

Would Take Glass Eye Back.

Paul Gary of Anderson, Ind., is all American, with the exception of a glass eye. The substitute optic is alien.

Gary tried to enlist in the United States marine corps at their recruiting station in Louisville, Ky., but was rejected when his infirmity was discovered by Sergt. G. C. Wright.

"Didn't you know that the loss of an eye would prevent your enlisting?" asked the sergeant.

"I thought it might," explained Gary, "but this glass blinker is the only part of me that was made in Germany, and I want to take it back."

He was advised to mail it.

THINGS THAT ARE NOT SEEN

Much That Cannot Be Explained or Understood—People Have to Look On From the Outside.

"To speak frankly, uncle, I can't bring myself to look much on a world that's all out of sight," said Howard Cranston with jaunty decisiveness. "I think I can understand the point of view of the Bible—just a little, anyhow. It was the natural thing to 'walk by faith' in those days, for there wasn't much else you could walk by. The primitive mind peoples the shadows with supernatural powers, but science has let in so much light that there aren't many shadows left. That's why faith seems to me like an anachronism. The only way to keep it untouched is to get back to the old, forgotten point of view, and look out on the world just as if nothing had been learned in the last thousand years or more."

"I was thinking about Culver this morning," Doctor Gresham said, and his nephew raised his eyebrows inquiringly at the sudden change of topic. "There must have been a weak streak in Culver somewhere, although I was his chum in college four years and never suspected it. He was one of the half dozen fellows in our class whom I expected to make their mark in the world. He didn't—as you know, I've talked with some of his intimate friends, but I've never been able to discover the reason. And yet there must be a reason—one of those subtle, intangible things that seem often to make or unmake a life, but that the keen probe of science can't quite reach."

"I begin to see what you're aiming at." There was an accent of constraint in the young voice. "Of course there's a lot we can't explain or understand. We're handicapped by having to look on from the outside."

The doctor nodded.

"Again," he said, "there's a whole world open to you as an educated man that has no existence for Jerry Lomax. It's not only open to you, but you've entered into it, and, in a measure, possessed it. It's very real to you, and you've found it engrossing and enjoyable. You haven't a doubt about this world of thought, as we may call it, being just as real as the grosser world of sense perception. And yet you'd find it hard to convince Jerry that there is such a thing. The words wouldn't mean anything to him. He'd have to go in at the basement door and climb up, step by step, to where you stand before he'd understand."

SAUNDERS BRO'S.

"I remember the case of an old lady, a patient of mine, who was as sure of the love of God as you are of the law of gravitation. She'd been a bed-ridden invalid for 12 years, but she had lived so close to God that every doubt had vanished. She didn't have to get back to the old, forgotten point of view, or make a shadow land for her God to dwell in, or forget the wonderful things that have happened since the Bible was written. She just found God sometime when she especially needed him, perhaps, and then kept close at his side till she came to know him. I have often thought that God's presence was just as real to her as mine was—possibly more so. That's when I first began to see that I was an outsider. I was a professing Christian, but I hadn't got into the inner circle."

"One can't afford to miss a whole world, and think it isn't there, if—if the fault is all with his own eyesight," the young man replied soberly.—Youth's Companion.

Waifs Who Make Good.

Everybody has read stories of waifs who got a chance and made good, we mean in fiction. That they also make good in real life, says the New Orleans Daily States, is proved by the annual report of the Children's Aid society of New York.

For some time the society has been diligently searching the country for reliable testimony regarding strays who made their mark in the world, and it has made up this list of successful men rescued as children from the street or taken from an asylum or corrective institution.

One state governor, one territorial governor, two congressmen, two district attorneys, two sheriffs, two mayors, a justice of the supreme court, four other judges, two college professors, two dozen clergymen, seven high school principals, an auditor general, nine members of state legislatures, two artists, 34 bankers, 19 physicians, 35 lawyers, 12 postmasters, 97 teachers, many business and professional men, farmers and clerks, besides 7,000 sailors and soldiers.
