same as was exemplified here a week ago when they were beaten by Moro. Macnab is a competent pitcher but any time a ball is hit a man gets on base because of errors in fielding.

One encouragement for the Rufus boys is that they are all young and have plenty of time in which to learn the game and acquire fielding experience. If they stick with it they can become a formidable team in a few years.

Young pitched his usual good game for the winners making 16 strikeouts.

season, but stocks in Canada, Argentina and Australia totaled around 107,000,000 bushels less than a year ago. In the United States most of the increase in supplies was in farm stocks which at the first of March were 43,000,000 bushels greater than a year earlier. Country mills and elevator stocks were somewhat under those of a year ago and were the smallest since 1918. Canadian wheat stocks totaling about 243,000,000 bus. at the first of April were around 37,000,000 bushels under those of a year ago, and also slightly below those of 1929, but with those exceptions than for any other year for which data are available, Canadian farm stocks were about 30,000,000 bushels less than on the same date last season, but country elevator stocks established a new high record with a total of 83,500,000 bushels and reflected the progressive accumulations during the past eight seasons, when each year has shown a gain over the preceding one. Stocks in the Southern Hemisphere countries are around 70,000,000 bushels under those of a year ago, reflecting the smaller crops and the materially increased shipments to date this season.

Pacific Coast wheat markets advanced about the same amount as Eastern points, influenced largely by the same factors.

Facts About Turkish Tobacco.

The tobacco plant originated in America. Hundreds of years ago, it was not known when or how, tobacco seed was transported to Turkey in Asia Minor and Greece. The rainfall there is about 60 per cent of the average rainfall in the tobacco producing sections of the United States, and this plus soil and other differences, made the tobacco plant lose its American characteristics and gradually take on new qualities. The result was that the tobacco grown in these countries became a distinct type, known as Turkish tobacco.

Turkish leaf is much smaller than American. The average size is about 3 by 4 inches, while many leaves are only 1 inch in width and length. All so they are very thin—a thousand or more leaves to the pound. The most marked difference, however, is in the taste—the pungent, spicy aroma distinctly different from Domestic.

Cigarette smokers owe a lot to Turkish tobacco, for it was cigarettes made out of Turkish leaf that first became the vogue in this country. At first, cigarettes were made entirely of Turkish, just as at one time, many popular brands were made of straight Virginia.

Years ago, the Liggett & Myers Company, manufacturers of Chesterfield Cigarettes, discovered that cigarette made of a blend of Turkish and Domestic tobaccos was better than either kind of tobacco straight. It takes just the right amount of the right kinds of Turkish tobacco to give a cigarette better taste. For Turkish tobacco is to cigarette what seasoning is to food—the spice, the sauce. You want enough in a blend, but not too much. There's just enough Turkish in Chesterfields to give them a better taste—a more pleasing aroma—to make them taste better.

There are several kinds of Turkish tobacco, and each type gets its name from the name of the district where it grows. The four most famous are Xanti, Cavalla, Smyrna, and Samsoun. In each of these sections, this company has its own native and American buyers. To purchase and handle the Turkish leaf, it employs 26 native buyers, and during the re-handling season, over 3000 native women. As more managers and supervisors, it has 16 Americans, for all of its tobacco remains in its original sections where it is purchased for one year or more for curing, before it is shipped to the United States.

Tobacco, today, is the most valuable export of Turkey and Greece. About 90 million pounds a year are produced in Turkey, while Greece yields approximately 100 million. This tobacco is classified into 5 different qualities and the three best qualities from the most famous districts, Xanthi, Cavalla, Smyrna, and Samsoun, are used in the manufacture of Chesterfield Cigarettes.

There is an import duty of 35c a pound on Turkish tobacco, which makes it expensive; but cost doesn't count when it comes to making Chesterfield the best cigarette that money and science can produce.
