

Eighth Grade Holds Final Exercises

The graduating exercises and party of the eighth grade class of the Moro school provided an interesting evening last Wednesday.

A splendid program was given in the domestic science room which had been decorated with class colors and which was taxed to hold the relatives who attended. Members of the school board also were guests.

It is interesting to note that the 1932 class, which is thirteen in number, also had thirteen members when starting to school in 1923. Of the original class only four are finishing the grammar school work at Moro this year: They are Doris Morrison, Mary Pinkerton, Lloyd Henrichs and Austin Foss.

In presenting the diplomas, Mr. Adams, chairman of the school board, expressed the opinion of the parents when he complimented both teacher and pupils for maintaining such high ideals and for acquiring a knowledge of some of the finer things of life as well as their text book work.

An appropriate gift was presented to Mrs. Kylo, their teacher, by Austin Foss, president of the class, in appreciation of the kindly and genuine interest which she has had in their welfare through all the year.

At the conclusion of the program all repaired to the auditorium where games were played and light refreshments were served.

Let There Be Light

Cop: What in the world are you looking for?

Man: I'm looking for my pocket-book, which I lost down the street there.

Cop: Then why don't you go back and look for it where you lost it?

Man: Because there's more light here.—Selected.

health, disposition and social standing. After the prosecution and the defense had wrangled over the case in the presence of Judge E. Vern Baker, it was sent to the jury who soon returned a verdict in favor of the defendant. The trial was put on by Mr. Tetz' American Government class. Those occupying leading roles were: Presiding judge, E. Vern Baker; clerk, Bruce Alley; attorney for the plaintiff, Willard Barnett; attorney for defendant, Don Smith; bailiff, Glenn Perry.

After the trial the students, teachers, and children gathered in the lunch room where a pot luck dinner was served.

Dinner was followed by a May Queen pageant honoring George Washington on his bi-centennial birth year. This was put on by the entire grade school with the queen, Miss Zela Ruggles, and her attendants, the misses Pauline Newcomb, Marietta Perry, Helen Engstrom, Eva Perry, Lila Faye Boyce, and Lois Russell, being chosen from the high school.

Following the pageant the company adjourned to the baseball field where a team of the "dads" played a team composed of high school and grade boys a fast and snappy game. The final score was 6-5 for the youngsters thereby perhaps bearing out the adage that "youth must be served."

cultural things. Orris Dorman, director of the North Pacific Grain Growers and head of the membership activities, introduced Chas. S. "Farmer" Brown in a few words in which he expressed appreciation for the size of the crowd that was present and the interest in gaining membership that has been evinced in this county.

And then—Farmer Brown, himself, a small man, with a rather long face, grey hair, humorous eyes, pleasant mouth, a long nose and a rather serious, thoughtful cast of countenance that gave weight to his words, stepped to the front of the platform and began another of his talks that have made him famous among the followers of cooperation throughout the west. His talk was interspersed with stories all funny and all pertinent to the point he was trying to make.

The farm board and the government sponsored cooperatives are new enterprises, he said, and they are not yet understood by all of the people. There is interest in them, however, for all agriculturists recognize the need for cooperation and are willing to adopt any plan that will aid it.

He drew a chart on the blackboard which showed that industry is organized 80 percent, labor 75 percent and agriculture 33 percent; that industry is 85 percent efficient; labor 75 percent efficient and agriculture 75 percent efficient; and that industry is 95 percent organized for marketing, labor 65 and agriculture only 30 percent. He amplified this chart by saying that agriculture could increase in marketing efficiency to whatever extent they were willing to cooperate.

Quoting from Emerson he said that "God cannot bless the people greater than their ability to receive" and paraphrased it to explain that the extension service, or the government cooperatives cannot aid people to a greater extent than they are willing to be helped or to help themselves. Lettuce growers in his home state of Arizona could not single handed get their rates lowered on their products, but with the aid of the government department of agriculture they had almost immediate success, said the speaker to make the example easier.

He gave the purposes of the farm marketing act which are three. First: to minimize speculation; second, to eliminate waste; third, to help farmers organize into cooperative organizations to market, sell and handle their products. He elaborated on the first of these and stated that some economists claimed that speculation was an excellent thing for farmers, but the speaker questioned this statement, for if it is so valuable for the farmer why isn't it used by industry. "Why," he said, "Don't the machinery companies have speculation? When the depression came and there were 100,000 automobiles on the market why were they not thrown on a speculative market if it is a good thing?"

The Maryland dairymen were given as an example of a cooperative group that were able to get together with themselves, the distributors, and he consumers that a fair and equitable price was set for milk that returned a profit to the growers and the distributors at a price the consumer could afford to pay.

No one is against the cooperative movement the speaker said, except the speculators and the uninformed. Of these it is not expected that the speculators will favor a system of marketing that will make them unnecessary. Of the uninformed he said that even as it was true of spiritual things that "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free," it was also true of economic things and when these uninformed were acquainted with the economic truths behind the marketing system of the cooperatives it would free them from their economic bondage.

Of the plea of opponents that the government should keep out of business he said that the government was in many other businesses beside agriculture. The railroads, the tariff, the postoffice, labor legislation, etc. and could not in fairness refuse the same aid to the farmers.

Two numbers on the program were well appreciated by the audience. These were a flute solo by Homer DeMoss and a violin solo by Elbert DeMoss of the well known DeMoss family that has made Sherman county's name known where ever they have travelled.
