

FIELD DAY

ed for their smut resistance. There are several kinds of smut and while immune to one or several kinds another varieties may infect them and render them useless as a field crop.

Farmers were shown the big experiment where 2 dates of fall plowing 3 of spring plowing, 2 depths of spring plowing, and 9 tillage methods have been tested for 20 years.

Average crop yields on these were marked on boards and showed that April plowed plots had produced 27.2 bushels per acre. May plowed plots 25.8 and June plowed plots 21.9. Wet plowed fall plots have produced an average of 24.8 and dry fall plowed plots an average of 23.4.

Another experiment that is very interesting is the one having to do with the surface evaporation and transpiration of plants—transpiration meaning the evaporation of water from the plant itself.

The average of all dates of plowing on the uncultivated plots is 21.7 bushels. On the plots that have been harrowed once the average is 22.7 bushels and on the plots that have received clean cultivation the average is 23.9 bushels per acre per year.

This experiment enables the experimenter to determine that the average amount of water needed to produce a pound of dry matter is 450 pounds and that it requires 1250 pounds of water to produce a pound of wheat seed.

The amount of water that can be grown on an inch of water in the soil varies from 1.8 bushels to 4.8 bushels with an average of 3.3 bushels.

The visitors listened to short talks by George Hyslop, of Oregon State College who is well known throughout the state for his work with different crops and Dean Schoenfeld, director of the extension service at the college.

WORLD WHEAT — INTERNATIONAL SHIPMENTS

WORLD WHEAT — PRODUCTION, STOCKS, AND U. S. FARM PRICE

A graphic picture of the world wheat movement for the last five years as compared with a similar period immediately preceding the World War is presented in the accompanying charts. The charts are being distributed by North Pacific Grain Growers Inc. to point out that unless international trade in wheat increases rapidly, it would seem obvious that American growers must either continue to accept world prices for all their wheat, or reduce acreage and surplus s. or perfect a plan for obtaining a higher-than-world price for wheat consumed within the United States.

The "origin" side of Chart "A" indicates the extent to which other countries have gained on the United States in the wheat exporting field. While wheat shipments from the United States have increased 3.2 per cent, shipments from Canada have jumped 21.3 per cent, from Argentina, 7 per cent and from Australia, 4.6 per cent.

The United States and Canada now contribute more than one half the about one fifth; Australia, about one seventh, and the remainder comes total world shipments. Argentina from all other exporting countries including Russia. The extent to which Russia regains her pre-war importance as a wheat exporter will determine the adjustments other exporting countries will be forced to make, unless the total international trade in wheat is increased appreciably.

The "destination" side of Chart "A" indicates the rising importance of importing countries. These include China, Japan, Brazil, Central American nations and Egypt. They appear to offer a potential source if future increases in wheat importation, with price an important element. It is interesting to note practically all of the countries named are so-called "silver countries."
