ROYAL INDIAN BLOOD RULES OVER ROUND-UP

The blue blood of the first Americans flows through the veins of these five Indian girls who will preside over the destiny of the Pendleton (Ore.) Round-Up, September 8, 9 and 10. Reading from left to right, they are Princess Whets-wo-wee-poo, or A Stream at Dawn; Wet-stone-mi, Rippling Water; Te-a-mu-ta-lote, Summer's Rainbow; Hia-tok-qu-yicht, Wandering Maiden; and Hie Highness Queen Talla-we-ton-mi, White Dove. They will be charming hostesses to the thousands of veterans who will stop off for the western epic of the plains on their way to the Portland National Convention of the Legion, September 12-15.

Indians Spectacular At Round-Up Time

Pendleton, Oregon, August 15.—(Special)—What becomes of the Indians when the Pendleton Round-Up is over?

This is a frequent inquiry of strangers visiting the famous classic, and will be asked again this year when the Round-Up takes place on September 8, 9 and 10.

The uninitiated, seeing the 2000 and more Indian men and women in full war regalia and costly beaded dresses, believe this to be their yearly habilitation and that they live in tepees the year 'round.

This is a pleasant illusion which would be quickly dispelled were the stranger to remain in Pendleton after the close of the exhibition.

For when the crows have departed and the dust settled in the arena the Indian men and women appear in the same garb as their white neighbors. The one exception is the shawl worn by the women. The older generation would not think of appearing in public with their shoulders uncovered, even though an American dress shields them to the neck. It is a tribal tradition.

These rich garments seen at the Round-Up are legacies of generations. They are hoarded carefully and used only for the Round-Up or some mysterious ceremonial whose portent is known only to the Indians.

And, to dispell another illusion, when their tepees of elk hide and other skins which house them on the Round-Up grounds are dismantled, the Indians return to quite modern homes on the Umatilla reservation just a few miles from Pendleton.

Here their life progresses much as a white man's. The head of each Indian family is allotted 160 acres of land by the government, each son and daughter 80 acres, and the new arrivals in the family smaller tracts. They are entitled to develop this land in any way they choose, many raising wheat or corn or engaging in some other agricultural pursuit.

However, should the Indian prefer the more idyllic life of his ancestor, he can lease his land to the white man who plants it to grain. These leases are supervised by the government's Indian representative who lives on the reservation, Major Omar Babcock. The price varies with the quality of the soil and other agricultural considerations. The money is paid yearly and the Indian is free to use it as he deems fit.

There is a provision in the leases, however, that stipulates the Indian shall retain a small parcel of land on which to live and that the white lessee shall provide the Indian with as many houses as he desires.

This last phrase is in consideration of the ancient Indian tradition. For should someone die in the house, the Indian and all his family forsake its shelter and move into tepees. It is the Indian belief that a house in which death has occurred is beset by evil spirits and that to abide within means disaster.

Hence, should any member of the family of Indians die during the lessee's tenancy, he is obliged, by terms of the lease, to build him a new house. It doesn't matter if the house is a day old, when death enters the Indian flees its portals.

Mrs. H. S. McDanel Tells Of Meeting

The following communication has been received from Mrs. H. S. McDanel a Sherman county pioneer who is living in Portland. It tells of a get together of Sherman countians in Portland whose names will be remembered by many present day residents.

The Sherman county Portland ladies were delightfully entertained this week, at the home of Mrs. E. J. Arnold, daughter of Miles and Leslie, who were formerly residents of Moro.

A game was played, the answers to the questions being the names of different kinds of trees. Mrs. M. B. Taylor being the winner of the prize, a handsome sofa pillow.

Bridge followed with three tables and we enjoyed the usual good time talking over old times when we were among you. We felt that although you were absent in person your spirits were with us.

Mrs. Arnolds home at East Flander st. in Lauralhurst was a bower of beauty. She had chosen French Marigolds for color in the decorations and delicious refreshments were served at the close of the afternoon.

Many were unable to attend but among those presents were Madams M. B. Taylor, H. A. Moore, Henry Page, A. H. Cousins, Nels Hansen, Laura Moore, E. A. Southwick, Mabel Moore, J. R. Morgan, Gilbert, Mrs. C. W. Moore, Mrs. McDanel and the hostess Mrs. Arnold.

Mrs. Sadie Orr Dunbar will entertain next Saturday honoring her father Mr. Orr with a birthday party. They formerly lived at Wasco. The next event will be the usual Sherman County picnic at Peninsula Park the first Sunday after Labor Day. Please don't forget the date for we hope to meet many of you again at that picnic.

Mrs. McDanel.

A husband has only one wife, but the iceman has his pick.

The editor stood at the pearly gate, his face was worn and old; He meekly asked the man of fate admission to the fold.

"What have you done?" St. Peter asked, "to seek admission here?" "Oh, I ran a county printing shop on earth for many a year."

Peter touched the bell. "Come in," he said, "and take a harp. You've had enough of—er—trouble."

Wid women of Africa, have long hair and go without clothes, while ours have short hair.

Loe: "Step up, and kiss the bride."
Lee: "You're wrong. It's time for me to quit."

First Sweet Young Thing: "I drank six cocktails at the party last night. I wonder if I did wrong?"
Second Ditto: "Heavens, girlie! Don't you remember?"

Polly: "Every time I catch my husband flirting he has to buy me something to wear."
Dolly: "What a wardrobe you must have dearie."

THRIFTY MAIN DISHES

"What do you think would be good for supper tonight?" How often have you asked this question after pondering over it and finding that your ideas on something significant were just about nil? It is an experience that every housewife faces.

Although this is the season of the year when the body needs a smaller supply of fuel, when the appetite craves cool, crisp foods and plenty of liquids and when the labor of preparing meals should be reduced to minimum. It is still necessary to supply the meal with one substantial main dish. It is well to reduce the amount of meats, fatty foods and those requiring much cooking and to use instead foods easily digested and prepared as cream or cottage cheese dishes, simple egg dishes, a liberal amount of fruits, vegetables and milk.

Some thrifty main dishes easy to prepare and particularly appetizing are:

LIVER CASSEROLE

Two potatoes, 2 carrots, 2 cups green peas, 1 diced onion, 1 pound liver, 6 tablespoons butter, 3 tablespoons flour, 2 cups milk, 2 teaspoons salt and pepper to taste.

Cook the potatoes until slightly tender with the carrots, then cut into cubes and cook with the peas. Flour the sliced liver and brown in butter. Remove and cut into cubes. Brown onions in butter and remove. Make a gravy with the browned butter, flour and milk. Arrange a layer of vegetables, then a layer of liver in a casserole. Repeat and add salt and pepper. Pour gravy over this and bake in a moderate oven 30 minutes.

ENGLISH MONKEY

One cup milk, 1 cup stale bread, 1 tablespoon butter, 1 cup grated cheese, 1-2 teaspoon mustard, 1-2 teaspoon salt, pepper to taste, 1 egg.
Add milk to stale bread crumbs in a saucepan and let stand 15 minutes. Add butter, mustard, salt and pepper and beat slowly. Stir in egg, slightly beaten, and pour over toast or crisp crackers on hot platter.

RICE, CHEESE WITH TOMATOES

Two tablespoons butter, 2 tablespoons flour, 2 cups tomatoes, 1 tsp salt, 1-2 cup grated cheese, 1 cup rice, pepper, 1-2 chopped onion, 1-2 bay leaf, 1-teaspoon parsley.
Cook one cup rice. Melt the butter, add the flour and stir until smooth. Add tomatoes, onion and other seasonings. Cook until it thickens. Put rice in baking dish and pour sauce over it. Add cheese, mix, saving enough to sprinkle over top. Bake 20 or 30 minutes in a moderate oven.

FOOD FOR THE FAMILY

It is not easy to lay down specific diets for everybody. Various factors enter into the constitution of a diet. A man doing manual labor can utilize more heavy food than an office worker. Old people need less nourishment than those of middle age. People in cold northern climates require more meat and fat than those in warmer countries. A growing child needs more food than an adult to build up the growing body.

Good habits are easily formed in childhood in respect to eating as well as in other things. Often it is hard to get a child to take certain articles of food, such as spinach, or other vegetables, cereals, or fruits, which should be included in their dietary. Gentle measures are preferable to harsh ones in this respect. The child should be induced to eat a small quantity of the article disliked at first. Gradually, as a rule, the dislike will wear off and more and more of the article eaten with the diet.

Above all, avoid discussing diet in the presence of children. Do not say that this food is "good" while that is "bad" etc. A better way would be to teach them by example by eating some of the food in question yourself in a manner that shows complete enjoyment.

In this connection, it should also be remembered that hunger is the best sauce. A child that comes to the table hungry from out door exercise is not likely to quibble about the food set before him.

Diet for Young Children

For very young children milk is still the staple article of their diet. In addition they should have some cereal daily, fruit cooked or as juice once or twice, eggs, vegetables and some bread. At the younger ages meat is not essential and usually the child is better off without it. The tendency, when too much meat and other solid foods are given, is for the child to drink less milk. Milk contains more vitamins and other constituents, such as calcium, which are essential to a growing child.

WAREHOUSES FILLING

may not be reached unless the price rises considerably more than it has so far. Farmers are debating whether to haul their wheat to town for the price offered or to keep it on the ranch and feed it to stock of some kind where they have the stock or means to buy them. Probably more than the usual amount of wheat will be kept on the farms for feed and seed and to take care of incidentals and food and fuel supplies for the winter.
