Things To Do With Fresh Tomatoes
New Tricks With Tomatoes
During these early fall days the question of how to serve tomatoes is a pressing one to all housewives, not only to those having access to home-grown ones but to those tempted with the quantity now appearing in the markets. The tomato, popular long before its great nutritive value was realized, is now considered one of the most valuable foods in the American diet.
The food value of the tomato is much the same as that of the orange, grapefruit and lemon, being rich in vitamins A, B and C. Because of its richness in the vitamins and if the fact that its content of vitamin C is not reduced much, if any, by canning it has been widely used in recent years. They are excellent for adding flavor to the more bland foods like rice, macaroni etc.

Tomatoes can be used in many different ways—raw, cooked or canned—they can be served at any meal or any part of a meal. Cream of tomato soup is always a favorite and makes a good main lunch dish for the school child's lunch. A delicious luncheon salad is made by stuffing

If elected I will do the work for the salary provided by law.

Merchant A sat disconsolately in his store thinking about the wonderful bargains he had on his shelves and wondering why people did not come in after them. He did not consider it worth while to advertise.
He had some customers, people who had known him for years and who traded with him through friendship. Every few days some of these customers noticed bargains in the advertising of another merchant and they took advantage of these bargains because they didn't know what merchant A's price might be on that particular item.
Often times the customers found the bargains in another town or even in another county and then every other merchant in the town lost trade. When this became common all business was slack and people said the old town was dying.
Merchants who wish to get new business must advertise and those who want to hold their business must advertise or it gradually slips away and is lost until an expensive campaign brings it back.
Merchants in Sherman county have one medium that reaches all of their customers. It is the SHERMAN COUNTY JOURNAL.
