

UNIVERSITY ESTABLISHED THROUGH SACRIFICE

The campus of the University of Oregon stands today as a fitting monument to the struggle, the determination and the sacrifice of Oregon pioneers who fought so valiantly and so hard to raise the necessary funds to keep faith with the promise of the state legislature to locate the University in Eugene permanently and to provide for the state sound educational institutions for their children and their children's children.

The story of the founding of the University is one replete with incidents of sacrifice. Then, during the years 1872 to 1878, as now the country was in the throes of business upheaval. But the legislature had promised little Eugene City to permanently locate the newly planned University of Oregon providing the citizens of the town and county would donate a site and raise $50,000 for the first building—and Eugene answered this challenge.

Old journals tell of the method in which the necessary funds were raised. School children brought dimes, farmers brought wheat, sheep, pigs, butter, eggs, chickens, all to be turned over and sold to raise money. Some even borrowed in order that they might contribute to this cause. Bricklayers and carpenters gave services; lumbermen and dealers gave material and supplies.

The late Dean Straub who served the University for over 50 years had many stories to tell about the determination of those early citizens.

"Ben Dorris, Tom Hendricks, Judge J. J. Walton, all of these men who fought so hard to get the University here, have told me that time and time again on Friday afternoons there would not be a cent to pay workmen. One said he would go out to a farmer and the farmer would say, 'I'm sorry. I haven't any money.' 'Well, how about that cow?' the solicitor would ask. The farmer would say take it, and it would be sold to pay the workmen. Washerwomen, dress makers and others would devote one day's earnings out of each week, turning the funds over to the Union University Association.

"Yes, we had hard times getting that money," says Thomas Bailey. "My father turned over 40 acres to be sold toward the fund, and I can remember others doing the same."

The county Council, Patrons of Husbandry (the grange of today) did its part, and during the most discouraging period set themselves a quota and pledged it in full.

But Eugene's giving did not end with the completion of the building. Since those days of sacrifice Eugene citizens and friends of the University from all parts of the state, as well as eastern foundations, have given freely, and saved millions for the tax payers of Oregon.

The new museum of art, Gerlinger hall, Deady hall, Villard hall, and numerous collections and museum pieces as well as scholarships and research grants stand today as living monuments to the sacrifice and the determination of citizens of the state who for over 50 years have striven to build a greater educational system for Oregon.

Little Jonny, aged seven, had been taken to the zoo to see the animals. He stood before the spotted leopard's cage for a few minutes staring intently. Then, turning to his mother, he asked:

"Say, Ma, is that the dotted lion that everyone wants Dad to sign on?"

Oregon Ice-Cream Shipped To Islands

Nearly thirty days ago some Oregon dairymen milked, cooled and shipped milk or cream to market which was enjoyed, fresh and sweet in the Philippine islands this week. Little did these dairy farmers realize, as they hustled about their daily chores that the milk produced from their herds would be used by residents of Japan, China or the Philippine islands many thousands of miles across the Pacific.

A sample consignment of ice cream consisting of 100 gallons, was sold immediately upon arrival of the ship at Manila and there is every indication that a complete and profitable market can be established there for ice cream, as well as other dairy products. While exchange rates are rather unsatisfactory for the sale of American products in Japan and China there was considerable interest among the buyers for the better

Waco High School Notes

By Mary Jeannette Sargent

Registration in Waco High School remained the same for the opening week as in several years previous with a total enrollment of fifty one students. The grade school this year shows a light decrease of seven pupils compared with the 1931 enrollment. The total enrollment for the opening day was 120 pupils with the prospects of several more before the close of the week. The greatest loss occurs in the primary grade there being only five first graders the opening morning.

The four upper grades have been reorganized on a departmental type of program with Miss Clothier teaching arithmetic and grammar to all four grades, and Miss Peugh teaching history, geography, and hygiene to all four grades. Bells have been installed and the pupils pass from room to room each period. Through this organization all periods in the upper grades are thirty to thirty five minutes in length. There are several distinct advantages to this plan for both the teacher and the pupil. Miss Peugh who has had special training will teach art in these grades a twenty minute period every other day and Miss Clothier will teach all penmanship. The traditional type of recess has been eliminated through this organization.

The classes in Waco High School are larger than years previous due to the elimination of a teacher. This week high school students are being coached on how to study. As a text they are using a little pamphlet published at Stanford University entitled "Study Hints For High School Students." It takes up the matter of improving your reading ability; increasing your ability to concentrate; taking notes; and budgeting one's time.

In the opening assembly Monday morning there was a great deal of enthusiasm shown and prospects are quite bright for an exceptionally good year both in class achievement and activities. An activity program for the first semester has already been published and includes activities for everyone besides the usual football and volleyball.

Miss Loraine Darby is coaching the girls volleyball with a turnout of 19 girls this week. Football under Mr. Manning began Tuesday evening with a turnout of practically every boy in school. A football schedule will be announced the first of the week. Games will be secured with Condon, Dufur, Goldendale, Moro, Arlington, Ione, Grass Valley, and possibly Madras.

The De Moss Concert Entertainers will give a special musical assembly at the Waco school next Wednesday afternoon.

SMART HANDBAGS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Those very fine old fabrics that used to be seen in custom-made English riding habits are being presented by important designers in coats and suits, hats, handbags, and footwear for summer. Rib-cord, as it is called, is a fine, soft, luminous weave of extreme sturdiness. It is proving an ideal medium for pocketbooks and handbags. Here also is a try of town and country handbags of zephyr and dune which go equally well with suits or sports clothes.

Perforated Shoes

Perforated white buck is going to be one of the smart and comfortable shoe materials for summer sports.
