WASCO METHODIST CHURCH
 "The Terrible Meek" a play sponsored by the Epworth League and coached by Miss Margaret McKee will be presented at the church Friday evening, April 14, at 7:30. This play is set on a wind swept hill six hours after the crucifixion. The characters are: Mary, the mother of Jesus played by Henrietta Hennigan; a Roman soldier, Max Williams; and a Roman centurian, Walter Warner.

The theme and lines of this production are much beyond the comprehension of children. It is suggested that parents do not send their children, but that if children do come, that they be accompanied by their parents. It is hoped that those that attend will come expecting to enter into a worship experience rather than simply being entertained. The play is being produced without the payment of the customary royalty by written permission of the author,

Charles Rann Kennedy.

Easter Sunday will be an important day in the church. The Epworth League will open the day with a sunrise breakfast and worship on the highest point on Gordon ridge. If the weather is not warm the breakfast will be at the home of William McKinney. Cars will be leaving Wasco for the Ridge around 4:30 Sunday morning.

At 10:00 o'clock the Sunday school program will be presented and the Sunday school play "The Way of the Cross." In this play a modern man is transported back to Jerusalem of long ago and learns the verity and meaning of Easter.

At 11:00 o'clock will be our worship, baptism of infants, and reception of members. The sermon theme will be, "Does Jesus Live for You?"

The adult women's Sunday school class party will be held at the home of Mrs. J. O. Youcum Wednesday afternoon at 2:30, April 19.

The Epworth League will have a reception for Mrs. Ada Jolley, a state W. C. T. U. worker, Thursday evening, April 20, at 7:30 at the parsonage. This is a beginning of a study of the liquor question by the young people. They are out to discover the truth, and plan on hearing every possible side before they are through.

Walter Warner, Minister.

Cave-in Damages Celilo Canal

Shipment of wheat by river barge suffered a blow Wednesday when 200 feet of the Celilo canal caved in near Dillon. This is the section of the work that caused so much trouble when the canal was being built. The steamer Hercules was loading wheat at Big Eddy at the time of the cave-in and it was necessary for stevedores to unload a large part of the cargo so it could be moved out of the canal.

Government engineers visited the scene of the damage and are reported to be making plans to permit use of the lower part of the canal. Permanent repairs will require some time.

Winter Wheat Making Growth

Winter wheat made fair growth in the Ohio Valley, Eastern part of the East and Southeast but in the West Central part of the main producing section, dry, with the condition of the crop poor and many fields bare. High winds and freezing temperatures caused further damage in Western Kansas and Nebraska during the week. Private trade estimates placed the 1933 winter wheat crop nearly 100,000,000 bushels below last season's small harvest. Wet and cold weather delayed seeding of spring grain in Minnesota and the Dakotas but seeding made fair progress in the Pacific Northwest where winter killing was extensive.

European wheat prices remained generally favorable with crops in Danubian countries in much better condition than a year ago. Conditions in Northwestern Europe generally good although spring seedings in some areas are delayed by dry soil. Winter wheat prospects in Germany are slightly better than average. The French and Italian crops have come through the winter in good condition, according to trade reports. Spring seeding in Russia made moderate progress but scarcity of seed wheat threatens a reduction in acreage. Dry weather in Northern Caucasus is unfavorable for spring seeding while moisture in other areas is also needed. Light rains put the soil in better condition for seeding in Argentina and trade reports indicate a somewhat larger acreage this season. Beneficial rains were also received in Australian wheat areas and with prospective seeding about equal to last years seedings.

CAPE AND CHECKS
 BY CHERIE NICHOLAS

Here's two important hints in regard to the new spring coats—capes and checks. Most every coat has its cape, for capes have gone on parade for spring. Capes that come off and capes that don't, capes that are fur-lined, and capes that are fur-trimmed, they each and all grace the season's smartest coats. Then as to the popularity of checks, it matters not whether the checking material be of fine sheer woolen of sturdiest weave or of gray and white silk, as is the material which fashion the model pictured, it is almost sure to be checked, for checked fabrics are the rage for spring. You'd love the material in this coat. It is a sort of soft heavy clinging-silk mixture which you are sure to like better every time you wear it. The gray fox bordering satisfies the eye with a delectable color blend.

Preliminary announcement from Washington of the Federal Farm Board's move to liquidate the commodity holdings of certain co-operatives, against which government loans had been made, caused some speculation in grain circles concerning the application of the plan to Farmers National Grain Corporation, national co-operative sales agency. Subsequent statements by Chairman Morgenthau and by officials of Farmers National Grain Corporation made it clear that the latter was in no way affected. The grain corporation, as pointed out by C. E. Huff, president, has no commodity loans from the government, and although it carries large stocks of grain in various parts of the country, these are strictly merchandising stocks and are constantly in liquid position, shifting from day to day. Ah chairman Morgenthau put it "There is no wheat pledged as security back of any of the loans" to Farmers National Grain Corporation. "Therefore, there is no wheat held by co-operatives that is subject to the announced program, which looks toward moving as rapidly as possible into consuming commodities which have been held by co-operatives as collateral to the Farm Board loans."

Discontinuance of the operations of The Grain Stabilization Corporation has no bearing whatever on those of Farmers National Grain Corporation. The Grain Stabilization Corporation, on the one hand, was purely a government instrument through which the Federal Farm Board sought to stabilize grain prices at a time when the whole financial structure of the country was threatened by declining farm values. The present administration having decided that stabilization operations of that kind are not to be a part of its program to rehabilitate agriculture, The Grain Stabilization Corporation passes out of the picture.

Farmers National Grain Corporation, on the other hand, is a national co-operative organization, all the stock of which is owned by farmer co-operative associations. It operates as a sales agency for these co-operative associations in conformity with all co-operative statutes. Its growth during the three years of existence has been steady and it has every assurance of continued government and farmer support.

Teacher—When water becomes ice what is the greatest change that takes place? Smart Boy—The greatest change is in the price.

THREE WAYS TO HEALTH
 by ADA R. MAYNE
 OREGON DAIRY COUNCIL

Many persons expected that in Olympic Village at Los Angeles there would be as many types of diets as there were nations participating in the games, but it was soon found that great athletes are international rather than national in their food habits. The study of many menus of teams of widely different national characteristics showed little basic difference in the principals of diet. All of them included substantial quantities of the protective foods—milk and its products, fruit and leafy vegetables.

Milk has been a prominent article of diet with such men as Charles Lindburg, Richard Byrd, Gene Tunney and others noted for their endurance and rugged health. College football and professional base ball players train on milk. The young athlete in grammar school now knows more about the food elements needed to make strong bones and elastic muscles than the average adult of a generation ago. And when he accepts the foods that are good for him it is most likely because this knowledge tells him that by so doing he is training for the athletic prowess that every normal boy aspires to.

It is important that the young athlete should have a substantial noon meal. This meal whether eaten at home or at school should furnish one third of the day's food requirements.

A leading formula recognized by leading nutritionists for the school lunch which works for home lunches too, includes one-half pint of milk to drink or two foods containing milk a vegetable beside potato, or fruit; two servings of some substantial food such as bread and butter, potatoes, macaroni, beans, meat, etc.; and a simple dessert if desired but not essential to a good lunch.

A few lunch menus planned according to this formula and suitable for the growing young athlete are:

- 1. Creamed Eggs Mashed Potatoes Raw Cabbage Salad
- Whole Wheat Bread and Butter

- Milk
- 2. Noodle Custard with Tomatosauce Buttered String Beans Graham Bread and Butter Milk
- 3. Vegetable Chowder with Bacon Lettuce Sandwiches Tapioca Cream Pudding
