Saturday Declared

"Poppy Day" in Moro

Saturday, May 27, was designated as "Poppy Day" in Moro in a proclamation issued today by Mayor French. The proclamation called upon all citizens of the city to observe the day by wearing the American Legion and American Legion Auxiliary poppy in memory of the World War dead. The proclamation stated:

"Whereas, in the great crisis of the World War the young men of Moro offered their services to our country with an exalted spirit of patriotism, numbers of them sacrificing their lives in that service;

"And, Whereas, the same exalted spirit of patriotism is needed today for the service of our country in its peace time difficulties;

"Therefore, I, Giles L. French, Mayor of the City of Moro, urge all citizens to recall the spirit of these gallant dead and renew the memory of their high patriotic service by the wearing of the American Legion and American Legion Auxiliary memorial poppy on Saturday, May 27.

"To that purpose, I do hereby proclaim Saturday, May 27, Poppy Day for the City of Moro."

Giles L. French

Mayor.
The campfire girls will sell the poppies here at the request of the local Auxiliary unit.

Pausing not an instant in her precipitate flight from the most amazing and impossible male hiped she had ever encountered, Roberta Antrim fled to her room, locked the door, lay down on her bed and indulged herself for ten minutes in that delight of her sex customarily known as a good cry. "The wretch!" she soliloquized. "The odious boor! He had the affrontery to talk to me exactly as if I were a refractory client instead of the girl he had but a moment before assured he loved to distraction. Oh, dear, what humiliation! I hate him, I hate him. I'll never speak to him again as long as I live."
When a woman has come to that conclusion, quite usually she finds it time to cease yain repining and weeping, lave her inflamed eyes with some soothing lotion and powder her nose. So presently Roberta did all of these things and while doing them appraised herself very critically in her mirror. She knew she had a medium-sized, well-shaped head covered with the sort of golden-tinted auburn hair which so many women attempt, but which few achieve. She had the sort of rich creamy skin that goes with such hair; her eyebrows and eyelashes were darker than her hair, their luxuriance conveying a hint of Celtic blood.
Her eyes, large, brown and a trifle sleepy, owing to her acquired trifle of gazing up at men from under the lids, were ideal for setting the reason of an impressive male tottering on its throne. Her nose had just escaped being snubby and was tilted at so gentle an angle as to confer upon her a faintly haughty expression when her face was in repose. She had a short, beautifully curved upper lip—which adorable malformation permitted much too easy a display of even, hard white teeth. Her lower lip was full, tender and, just a shade wful. Her chin was full and aggressive, her body beautifully formed, lithe as a cat's and suggestive of abounding health and much outdoor exercise.
Despite her almost startling beauty one realized instinctively that Roberta was not (sentimentally speaking) a clinging vine. One felt, too, that she had a healthy temper, despite her perennial good nature and her tolerance for her own sex. As a matter of fact Roberta did possess a temper readily aroused, but she had the saving grace of refusing to admit it except under extraordinary circumstances.
Appraising herself in her mirror, Roberta reflected with a sort of sweet bitterness that she had dressed that afternoon with an eye single to impressing herself upon the cool, quietly impersonal glance of Glenn Hackett. "If I were a girl who wore diamonds to the breakfast table," she told her reflection, "there might have been some excuse for his gauche conduct. One moment he had proposed and the next he was withdrawing the proposal. I wouldn't have accepted him on a bet, nice as he is and comfortable as he is to have around, but he might have given me an opportunity to say so! He was terrible! He revealing moment, he had seen something in me that revolted him—and I'm not revolting. I'm not, I'm not."
Once more she gave way to tears, but not for long. She dried her eyes and applied the powder rag. And then the real reason for her charm—the reason men adored her and made love to her—presented itself. Roberta was a good sport—none better, and hated a quitter—with all the strength of her vital, intelligent soul. She made a little grimace at herself.
"Well, Bobby Antrim, you took a man's size beating, didn't you? That Hackett imbecile isn't dull, at any rate. And I did start to say something banal—all about never having suspected his attachment! I see it all very clearly now. Right there little Bobby went blah! Yes, that was a sour note—and he has an ear for music. That man-animal has some pride—and I had thought they all had ego!"
She sat down in a low rocker to think it over very carefully. As usual, her resentment and rage were disappearing at the double; she was only sensible now of a feeling of humiliation, not so much because of what Glenn Hackett had said and done as because she had failed so miserably in feminine adroitness to meet an extraordinary situation. In a way of speaking he had demolished her. Paralyzed her powers of initiative and inventiveness and left her helpless to defend herself! ground her to a pulp!
He had proved to her what a monumental failure she had turned out to be in an art where, to quote Crooked Bill, she was supposed to be 150 per cent perfect!
Suddenly Roberta began to laugh. "Thinks he's won a great victory," she decided. "Well, like John Paul Jones, I have not yet begun to fight. I'll bring that unusual man to his knees and when I have him there I'll—well, I'll not do anything so un ladylike as to put my foot in his face, but I'll laugh at him! I swear I will. I'll laugh out loud!"
There is always a feeling of comfort when one has come to a decision after wrestling with a knotty problem. Roberta had her pose back again; she felt again that she was ready to conquer new worlds and make them like it. She went downstairs and found Glenn Hackett and Crooked Bill in the library enjoying cocktails.
"Have one, honey?" her guardian asked coaxingly. "A tiny one?"
"No, thank you, Uncle Bill. Give my share to Mr. Hackett. He's going to need it to give him courage to face the future."
"Bah!" Mr. Hackett replied rudely. He caught a wildly approving wink from Crooked Bill and decided to leap in over his head. "Sour grapes," he added—a bit viperishly, Roberta thought.
Roberta smiled with exceeding politeness, but there was coolness in the smile. Crooked Bill noticed her chin had gone up about a quarter of an inch. "Let's be good friends, Glenn," she said in her most ingratiating and fascinating manner. "You are so intelligent one can't help being attracted to you, and usually you're very nice. Really, if your bank account should ever be brought to the door and yellow leaf you should set up as a fortune-teller and mind-reader."
"I thought I had read yours correctly. I see now I did not."
"Indeed, you did. You're marvelous."
"You'll marry me when I get ready to marry you," he charged amiably.
"Why, you tell jokes, don't you?"
"Time!" Crooked Bill saw that the issue was far from clarifying. "No more of these lovers' quarrels, Roberta. Glenn is staying for dinner. You'll join us, of course, honey?"
"Why, certainly, Uncle Bill. How delightful, Glenn!"
Any man who thinks he can out-fence a woman is a fool, and suddenly Glenn Hackett realized he was all of that. Such realizations always disturb a manly man. "If I remain for dinner, Mr. Latham, I fear I'll not be able to do justice to your excellent cuisine. Therefore, with your permission, Bobby, and yours, sir, I'd like to motor back to town."
Crooked Bill was upset. "It's free!" he exclaimed, using his most formidable oath. He had placed his money, so to speak, on young Hackett and now the ingrate was running out on him, to employ a colloquialism. He was prepared to enter a vigorous protest, but the maid, entering with a telegram, rendered that impossible. "A telegram for you, Miss Roberta!"

"Thanks, Minna. May I?" With uplifted brows to her uncle and his guest, she commenced to tear the envelop.
"She's very polite, no matter what her other faults may be," Hackett remarked to Crooked Bill. Roberta ignored him and read aloud:
"Los Algodones, Texas, June 21, 1925.
