World's Fastest Aircraft of Transport Type

is only thirty five. Many years were required to arouse the public interest, but when this was done the people of the state, of Oregon made it possible to develop an intensive educational campaign for the control of tuberculosis.

Few people would deliberately give tuberculosis to members of their family or others with whom they come in contact. If this is true, why does the disease continue to spread? Ignorance and Fear are important factors.

People, who in the face of symptoms such as undue fatigue, loss of weight, prolonged coughing or spitting of blood fail to heed warnings may be generally placed in two groups: first, those who do not possess the knowledge that these signs may indicate the presence of tuberculosis, and second, those who fail to have an examination made for fear that they may be told that they have tuberculosis. Of all persons who spread the disease these two groups are the most dangerous. Not uncommonly it is possible to trace disastrous result to such ignorance, or fear, through two or three generations of a given family. Such a calamity is entirely unnecessary and can be avoided.

Anyone who has the disease or thinks he may have it should be selfish with it and not give it to a relative or friend. He should not wait until he has spread it to others before going to his physician and having a chest examination and a specimen of sputum examined.

Find out whether you may be spreading the disease for two reasons; first for yourself, as the earlier the disease is diagnosed and treated the more readily will you recover. There is no chronic disease more curable than tuberculosis and no more treacherous enemy to society than a neglected case. Second, prevent the calamity of having your sister, brother or others with whom you are in close contact develop the disease.

Inform your self regarding the characteristics of tuberculosis. If you have the slightest symptoms you should be carefully examined. Moreover, if you have been in contact with a case you should not wait until symptoms appear for they may be very slight, or even absent entirely. Even the smallest amount of sputum may be laden with the germs of tuberculosis. Such sputum should be very carefully collected in a cup or paper handkerchief and later effectively destroyed. The germ for tuberculosis, if spread to others, especially children, is the match which lights the fire of consumption.
