Health Depends On Purity of Water

The fact that Oregon has been fortunate of late in having few outbreaks of water borne diseases should not lull us into a sense of security, because such outbreaks have occurred in the past and may in the future. We deem it our duty to point out to those charged with the administration of cities in this state the great responsibility they carry in the protection of the people from water borne diseases and have them remember that eternal vigilance together with immediate corrective measures when and where needed is the price that must be paid to insure against such outbreaks.

Since the average person consumes anywhere from two to three pints of water per day, the sanity control of sources of water supplies is one of the most important methods of reducing the incidence of intestinal diseases. Contaminated water plays a definite part in the causation of intestinal, especially diarrheal diseases. The incidence of typhoid fever has been reduced fifty per cent by proper methods of supervision of water supplies.

Water becomes dangerous to man when it is directly or indirectly polluted with human excreta. Sewage is the most important source of pollution in rivers, lakes, and ponds.
Modern sewage treatment provides a solution to the problem of preventing water borne diseases. The organic matter found in sewage is composed largely of putrescible matter. This is decomposed by bacterial action. Undecomposed material is reduced to a minimum. The disease causing bacteria are also destroyed in the disintegration of the sewage. Foul, putrid sewage can be changed into crystal clear water which is not harmful to aquatic or human life.

Funds for the building of sewage treatment plants are now available to communities that will cooperate with the Federal government.

importance of using this fund:

"The question as to the advisability of the appropriation by the government of large amounts for the relief of unemployment by the construction of public works throughout the country, is of course, one for legislative and executive determination.

"There can, however, be no question that if such appropriations be made available, in no way could they be more useful to this and future generations than the construction and installation of adequate and safe water supplies and sewage disposal systems.

"Although there have been advances in all lines of medical science, in no one field of endeavor, perhaps, has there been such a saving of life as in the installation of water supply and sewage disposal plants."

An act to promote public works construction has been passed by Congress. This act provides for direct federal grants up to thirty per cent of the cost of labor and materials for public works projects and their assistance in the way of backing up local credit for the remaining cost. Any city desirous of undertaking the needed construction of sewage treatment plants, with the Federal aid promised, will do well to get started immediately on necessary preliminaries to place themselves on the program now in course of preparation. Application should be made immediately to the Oregon Reconstruction Advisory Board, Spaulding Building, Portland, Oregon.

Hints On Berry Canning Given By Expert

Raspberries and logans are the seasonable berries now ready for canning, and both lend themselves well to the cold pack method of canning, says Lucy A. Case, extension specialist in foods and nutrition at O. S. C. Those living on or near berry farms have the advantage of being able to can berries within a few hours after picking, or at least the same day, thus insuring the best color and flavoring. Here are some of the directions given by Miss Case for cold pack berry canning:

Wash the berries lightly, if at all, in a colander. Place hot, sterilized jars in a dish pan of very hot water. Pour a few berries into the jar and shake them down by gently tapping the bottom of the jar against a wooden board. Place the jar in hot water again, add more berries and shake them down, alternately to insure full jars. Add boiling hot syrup made in the following proportions: For one dozen quart jars of red or black raspberries, bring to a boil seven cups of sugar and 11 cups of hot water. For logan berries use 10 cups of sugar to 10 cups of hot water. Fill the jars with syrup to one-half inch from the top and partially seal. In case of automatic seal type of jar, place lid and clamp on jar. Leave jars in the pan of hot water until all are ready to process.

Have hot water bath boiling. Place jars in boiler on a rack which raises the jars at least one-half inch from the bottom, with water one inch over top of the jars. Cover the container and bring to the boiling point again as soon as possible to help insure full jars. Boil 20 minutes, counting time from when the water is at a rolling boil. Remove jars immediately, complete the seal and invert to cool, except automatic type of seal.

Open canning and other methods of food preservation are described in Extension Bulletin 450, "Home Food Preservation," which is available free at the office of the county agent or at the home economics extension office at Corvallis.
