walls were built in foreign countries in the last few years. In the year ending in June our total exports were but 33 million bushels which accounts for the large surplus of wheat in the United States and makes the reduction of the crop imperative.

The government proposes to reduce acreage to such a point that we will produce enough for home consumption only and to thereby raise the price until a bushel of wheat will buy as much as it did in the period 1919-1914. At that time the average farm price for wheat was 88.6 cents per bushel, but commodity prices have risen since that time and it will be necessary for wheat to sell on the farm for about $1.15 to equal the parity price of the base period.

The tax on milling wheat has been set at 30 cents for the 1933-34 crop year but it may be raised by the secretary of agriculture in order to give the farmers the parity price.

Farmers, in return for receipt of this bounty, agree to handle the vacated land as the secretary of agriculture may direct. Mr. Ballard gave it as his opinion that in the dry lands of eastern Oregon it may not be possible to grow much of anything on the land, but that in the valley different seed crops may be grown that will be profitable to farmers.

Pasture crops may be grown here and hay may be grown to feed livestock for home consumption, in the opinion of the speaker. This with the assumption that no farmer will increase his livestock except by natural increase.

Present information indicates that the bonus payments to farmers will be for their own use and that no one will be allowed to take the payment for debt. This is supposedly to insure the farmer enough money to operate his farm with, as it is expected that federal crop loans will cease.

None of the county wheat control associations will be allowed to enter into politics nor will they be allowed to become a grange or other agency attempting to influence legislation.

Warning Against Speculators Given

A warning has been given to farmers not to become victims of speculators who may want to buy up pigs and bred sows at current low prices now that the emergency hog control plan has been announced, according to information received from the United States department of agriculture by the Oregon State college extension service.

The hog production control program is strictly an emergency plan to meet the immediate situation says the department, "and not to be confused with the permanent corn-hog program."

The emergency plan contemplates premium buying of spring pigs which weigh 25 to 100 pounds and piggy sows which weigh 275 pounds or more. Prices to be paid at principal markets are $9.50 a hundred pounds for pigs weighing 25 to 30 pounds with heavier pigs 25c less for each additional 5 pounds in weight up to $6 for 95 to 100 pound pigs. Piggy sows over 275 pounds which will farrow within three weeks bring current market prices plus $4 a head premium, till subject to official inspection. The plan contemplates the purchase of about 4 million pigs and 1 million sows, should not be rushed to market as arrangements are not quite complete and the offer will probably continue until about October 1, according to information received at the agricultural college.

Efforts of Oregon farm organizations, cooperatives, produce dealers, civic bodies and individuals in protesting the abandonment of the government leased wire market news service in the northwest have been successful, and orders are now issued to resume nearly all former activities starting August 28. This will include the wire connections to Oregon State college from where the reports are issued via radio, circulars and press notices. Oregon's congressional delegation, headed by Senator Charles L. McNary, was instrumental in getting the service restored in the northwest.
